HARDING TELLS OF LOAN BILL IN TRIAL OF DOYLE

Councilman Cross-Examined by Lawyer Coakley as to Interview With District Attorney Moran and Subsequent Alleged Statements in Connection With It—Big Crowd at Court.

Before a crowded court room, Councilman Charles T. Harding was today cross-examined by Lawyer Coakley in the trial of James H. Doyle, superintendent of streets, who is charged with having made promises of assistance to Harding if he would vote for the big Fitzgerald loan bill.

Mr. Coakley finished with Harding at 11:47 o'clock. The prosecution was all in, and Doyle's lawyer immediately began his opening. He talked for but three minutes. Then he called as his first witness Lieutenant Hugh J. Lee, the police officer detailed to the District Attorney's office.

Harding testified that Doyle did not offer him cash. He declared that he had never told anyone that Doyle suggested paying him something on account on the night the loan bill was passed.

TELLS OF JAIL THREAT.

The witness told of his experience with Mr. Moran when he was called to the District Attorney's office. He said that Moran told him that he thought he was lying, and that if it turned out so the Councilman would be jailed.

The councilman said that he refused to write out the statement made to him by Doyle for Moran because he was Independent.

"Didn't you refuse to write it," asked Coakley, "because you didn't want to be bound by it and could lie out of it the next day?"

"No," replied Harding.

Mr. Coakley read an interview published in a newspaper which Mr. Harding had given to the interviewer the councilman was quoted as saying that he had been a friend Government man.

"Did you say that?" asked Coakley.

"Yes, in substance," replied Harding.

"What do you mean by 'in substance'? A. Why, words that are equivalent to that.

Q. Did you tell a reporter that you would not state a falsehood to put any man behind the bars? A. Yes.

Q. Were you not anxious to have that interview published in all of the newspapers. No.

Q. Didn't you tell Quirk to see that it got in all of the papers? A. I do not recall it.

Q.—Didn't you tell Moran that your memory was poor? A.—In substance, yes.

LAUGH ANGERS COAKLEY.

Q.—Didn't you tell this jury now more than five minutes ago that you did not tell Moran that your memory was poor?

Harding paused and began to laugh. This irritated Mr. Coakley.

"What are you laughing at?" demanded the lawyer.

Finally Harding admitted that he did remember to have said that he did not tell the District Attorney that his memory was poor. He was asked why he had made the statement.

"I must have been confused," he replied after a pause.

Q.—What do you say as to having a good memory? A.—I consider that I have a good memory.

Q.—Then why did you tell Moran that your memory was not very good? A.—I cannot answer that question.

Q.—Do you recall what Moran said to you when he first saw you? A.—No.

Q.—Did Moran tell you that he intended to put you before the Grand Jury, and that he wanted you to tell the whole truth? A.—Moran told me that he believed that I was lying, and said that if I were he would put me in jail.

Q.—Did you tell Mr. Inman (a reporter) that Mr. Moran told you that? A.—I do not remember.

COULDN'T RECALL OATH.

Q.—Did you tell Mr. Inman and Mr. Quirk that Moran swore out your? A.—Yes.

Q.—State what he said? A.—I can't recall it.

Q.—State it as nearly as you can? A.—I don't remember it.

Q. You went down the harbor on the Monitor on the anniversary of Boston, didn't you? A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what Moran said to you on the boat? A. I don't recall it.

Q. Did you tell any of the men on the boat that Moran said, "Now, you're a fine fellow"? A. He did not say it.

Q. Will you swear that you did not tell Alderman Berwin so? A. No.

Q.—Will you swear that you did not say twice that Moran used that language to you? A.—Harding was asked:

"Am I here to swear or to testify?" asked Harding, shortly. It raised a laugh.

Q.—Did Mr. Doyle offer you cash—not once—cash? A.—No.

Q.—Are you positive that you never told Doyle that you talked with Moran that evening? A.—Yes.

After a series of questions, Attorney Coakley obtained from the witness a denial that he had ever made the statement

Thomas L. Hisgen Leads on League Ballots

BIG VOTE AT PRIMARIES

Whitney and Bartlett Waging a Bitter War to Capture Delegates from Boston.

Lively Contests Among the Democrats in Wards 13, 15, 20 and Other Districts.

Most of the citizens of Boston who intend to take part in Friday's primaries under the Lieo law have already visited the polling booths and watchers say that the balloting has been heavy.

The fight between Bartlett and Whitney was what brought the Democrats out in large numbers, but politicians also took an interest in the Independence League showing, although this new and vigorous partywas handicapped in many ways and unable to poll anywhere near its full primary vote because of restrictions of the law which are found to bear heavily upon parties which have not had years in which to organize.

But there was no mistaking the fact that there was Independence League enthusiasm in all over town. Members of the party were all talking about the strength with the people of Thomas L. Hisgen of Springfield, who has been making a unique tour in the western part of the State as a candidate for the Independence League nomination for Governor. The League State convention is to be held in Faneuil Hall on October 3, and to-day delegates are being elected in cities and towns holding caucuses under the joint act.

Whitney-Bartlett Feud.

All the parties, in fact, are now electing State convention delegates. The interest in the Democratic primaries is due to the bitterness with which Henry M. Whitney and General Charles W. Bartlett have waged a campaign up and down the State for weeks.

All is harmony, however, in Independence League ranks, and well-posted politicians of all parties expect Hisgen to poll a great vote, if he is his party's nominee.

Big Vote Appears.

The voting began at 6 o'clock to-day, and from all accounts a big percentage of voters are attending primaries. In three hours in two Dorchester wards 6,000 votes were polled. This shows the interest taken throughout the city.

There is no opposition to Governor Guild and the Republican ticket.

Among the Democrats there are lively contests in Wards 13, 15, 20 and several other districts. The Whitney men have already cast their votes in every ward except 5, 18 and 24.

There are also in the State fight in the contests going on in the second, fourth, sixth, seventh and ninth senatorial districts.

There are six Republican candidates for the Republican nomination for district attorney in this city. John B. Moran says he is going to run as an Independent.

There are scores of minor contests for minor nominations going on all over the city.

The polls close at 4 o'clock this afternoon.

Bartlett Men to Bolt?

The fight for the Democratic nomination for Governor at the State convention to be held in Springfield on October 3 is the most engrossing of the contests which interests the two old parties. Although this is the fourth day since the forces of Henry M. Whitney and Charles W. Bartlett met in the final clash—the former coming down the track in the lead—Bartlett men still maintain that the contest is still in doubt, and that it will not be settled until the delegates are polled in the convention.

It is predicted, though not with authority, that the Bartlett men are not only going to Springfield prepared to fight, but that they intend to bolt, if given the least excuse. In fact, the Democratic State convention of this year is likely to be the most sensational known in Massachusetts since 1896, when rival ones were held in Boston.

There may be fraud charges made there by both sides. The prospect of the Democracy going into the fight against Governor Guild and the Republican ticket in a spirit of unity seems to be dwindling every hour.

Both Sides Suspicious.

Bartlett's campaign manager has said that Whitney men were preparing to buy unpledged delegates. Whitney's campaign manager seems perturbed over credentials.

It is said that there have been no precautions taken against forgery and the stuffing in, as delegates, of a lot of outsiders. As the Democratic State headquarters fails is laughed at as silly. But doubtless what

MELLEN WHITNEY

HEARST DEFINES POSITION

Nails Canard Regarding Conference Over Presidency as False—Says "I Seek No Office."

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The Chicago Tribune to-day printed the following statement:

"Members of the Chicago branch of the Independence League will make a pilgrimage to New York this week. They will go to a conference to be held at the Gilsey House on Friday, which they hope will result in William Randolph Hearst being the Democratic candidate for President of United States in 1908.

"The avowed purpose of the conference is to arrange for making the Independence League a national organization. The present plan, as outlined yesterday by one of Mr. Hearst's friends, is to have the New York meeting call a national convention, to which all branches of the league shall send delegates. This convention will be empowered to name candidates for President and Vice-President of the United States.

"The gathering will be held in advance of the national Democratic convention, so that the league can adopt its platform and name its candidates before the Democrats meet. It is planned also to make it an object lesson to these bodies and make them hesitate about instructing delegates for any other candidate than Mr. Hearst."

Upon the request of the New York World for a statement this evening, Mr. Hearst issued the following:

No Word of Truth, Says Hearst.

"A small boy was once asked to describe a crab, and he said that a crab was a red fish that walked backwards. The teacher replied that the definition was excellent, except for the three unfortunate circumstances that a crab isn't red and isn't a fish and doesn't walk backwards. The Tribune article is built on the same lines as the small boy's definition. It is an excellent effort, but there isn't a word of truth in it from one end to the other.

"Nothing has been determined as to what the Independence League shall do in National politics. A conference has been called to meet in Chicago Friday, the 27th, and that conference may take steps to harmonize the action of the Independence League in different States, or it may not. It may decide to plan for some immediate action in National politics or it may not. It may adjourn indefinitely, or it may adjourn to reassemble at some definite date and there to act on some plan. Nothing, however, has been decided upon to date.

Not a Candidate.

"The Tribune goes on to state, with the small boy's lack of scientific accuracy, that I am a candidate for a nomination for the Presidency. I am not a candidate for the Presidency on the Independence League ticket or on any other ticket, and I cannot conceive of any conditions on which I would be willing to become a candidate.

"I do not say this in the Roosevelttian sense, publicly declining the nomination and privately working to get it, nor do I say it through any feeling of pique or disappointment at the result of the late election. I am well satisfied to be a private citizen and to labor through the league and through the election of other to league principles. I believe that the dislike and holding of office and I dislike particularly being placed in a position where the sincerity of my principles can be questioned through campaigning for some office that I do not want, and that I would only consent to hold through a sense of public duty as I would serve on a jury.

Views Now Adopted, Praised.

"I have had a reasonably varied, and I hope reasonably effective, political career. I have been elected twice, defeated once, and I had the longest case of disputed election on record. I have introduced measures that other parties than mine have adopted, and I have been criticised for many opinions that other individuals are now being praised for entertaining.

"I see many Jackdaws parading about in my tail feathers, but I consider that merely as a compliment to the superiority of my political plumage. I hope to accomplish much more than I have accomplished through the development of the Independence League, and I shall devote myself heart and soul to the organization and extension of the League and to the wide dissemination of its ideas.

"I believe that the League is the one agency through which the great reforms that this country demands can be achieved and will be achieved."

JAIL THREAT MADE TO STANDARD OIL CHIEF

KELLOGG CLASHES WITH TREASURER TILFORD REGARDING STOCK OPERATIONS.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—So tense is the situation in the Government's Oil Trust hearing that Inquisitor Kellogg has been forced to make threat of jail in order to elicit the information he needs. The clash came when Mr. Kellogg had Treasurer Wesley H. Tilford of the combine on the stand.

The question which brought up the incident was in regard to the alleged family affair among the trust men, by which 404,619 shares of the 972,500 shares of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which was reorganized in 1892, were distributed among certain stockholders.

Mr. Kellogg asked if this stock went to John D. and William Rockefeller, H. M. Flagler, Benjamin Brewster, John D. Archbold, H. H. Rogers, W. H. Tilford, O. H. Jennings, C. W. Harkness, the Jennings estate, O. H. Pratt and the Charles Pratt estate.

"I object," said John G. Milburn, the trust's counsel. "The question is immaterial. You need not answer."

Mr. Milburn was quick to see what Kellogg's remark presaged, and he added in explanation that he had not understood the question; that Mr. Tilford was willing to answer if he understood the question.

"Do you swear, Mr. Tilford, that you do not know of this arrangement by which the coterie of oil magnates got the bulk of the stock between 1892 and 1897 and voted it as such?"

"No, sir, I do not."

Mr. Kellogg's effort to show a trust within a trust failed so far as Mr. Tilford was concerned.

MINUTES UNSEALED.

There was another buzz when Deputy United States Attorney Morrison forced Vice-President Benson, of the Tidewater Oil Company to unseal the minutes of a meeting of the directors January 17, 1883, at which, it is claimed, an agreement in restraint of trade was entered into with the Standard. The minutes were offered in evidence.

Later, Mr. Tilford admitted that there was a ten year guarantee of protection to the Indianapolis Gas Company and the People's Gas Light and Coke Company of Chicago, when the Indiana branch of the Trust took them over. Then he was asked:

"Do you know that the consideration of the sale of the Manhattan Oil Company to the Standard Oil was a guarantee that oil should be furnished for a period of ten years to Messrs. Benedict and Brady?"

"No, sir; I do not."

"You never heard of any such contracts, did you?"

"Yes, I have."

"Then certain guarantees were made by contracts entered into by the Oil Trust which other companies could not offer. Is that not so?"

"It might be."

A representative of the Trust has issued a statement that the combine will be reorganized. It follows:

DENIAL BY TRUST.

"The statement that a conference of the Standard Oil interests has been called for the purpose of changing the name of the company and effecting reorganization in general is without foundation. We can do nothing in this respect so long as the company is under investigation. I can say, however, that as soon as the Standard Oil Company has freed itself from the labyrinth of litigation now involving it, there will be a reorganization. The capital stock will be increased to an amount more in harmony with the value of its assets, say to $400,000,000 or $500,000,000.

"We also purpose to issue periodical statements of earnings, operations, etc. We purpose to give the representatives of the government everything in the way of information that it calls for, which is all we can do. If we are guilty of certain infractions of the law, then, practically all other corporations are guilty of the same offences and should be treated accordingly. But we are confident we will win out."

Hardly had the announcement been given out before John D. Archbold made this positive denial, signed:

"The statement issued, attributed to 'a representative of the Standard Oil,' to the effect that the company will be reorganized, its capital increased to $400,000,000, etc., is unauthorized and untrue."

RESCUE THREE WOMEN FROM BURNING HOUSE

A small fire, which broke out shortly after 6 o'clock this morning, threw the neighborhood in the vicinity of Harrison avenue and Florence street into a panic, and had it not been for the quick work of several police officers the loss of life would have resulted. As it was, three women were taken from the burning building and completely collapsed on reaching the street.

The building is a four-story brick structure with a store on the ground floor, while the other floors are occupied by Hebrew and Italian families.

The fire broke out on the first floor and was confined here after much hard work by the men of the district. It was discovered by a man who was on his way to work, and after turning in an alarm returned and warned the tenants.

There were seven children in the house and they made their way to the street in their night clothes, but the women who became bewildered in the excitement were found nearly overcome and were rescued.

The damage to the building will not exceed $2,000.

FAMILY BEGINS PROBE OF MRS. CARTER'S DEATH

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Dissatisfied by Coroner Dooley's investigation of the circumstances of the death of Mrs. Margaret Carter, who succumbed to a pistol wound, supposedly self inflicted, in millionaire "Jack" Whitney's home last Friday, Philadelphia relatives of the dead woman have put private detectives on the case.

It was upon these relatives' request that the Lincoln Trust Company, Mrs. Carter's executors, had the cremation of their client's body delayed yesterday, though the services were held at 2:30 in the afternoon, as originally planned.

The relatives stated to have been prompted to look into the case for themselves as a result of announcement that there were no powder marks on Mrs. Carter's forehead, as it is suggested would probably have been the case had she herself fired the shot which killed her.

BOY IN HOSPITAL FROM STAB WOUNDS

To-day, Francesco Blasi, fifteen years old, is in the Relief Hospital in a serious condition, suffering from stab wounds inflicted by another North End youth last evening. The Blasi boy was stabbed several times in the left side. Antonio Farcella, thirteen years old, of No. 193 North street, is being sought by the police on a charge of doing the stabbing.

MORAN HALES WARD 13 MEN TO PHONE HEARING

District Attorney Moran sprung a new sensation at the to-day session of the Grand Jury by producing three prominent politicians from Ward 13, South Boston, in the case of the Commonwealth against the ex-New England Telephone Company. They were Councilman Leo McCullough and former Representatives Andrew L. O'Toole and Eugene Brazzell.

McCullough is chief lieutenant of Senator Frank J. Linehan, who controls that district, and Brazelle is another lieutenant there. O'Toole was in the House of Representatives in 1903 when the law was enacted forbidding officeholders from solicitbeing employment with public service corporations for themselves or their friends. For the first six months of this year O'Toole was foreman of the Grand Jury.

In addition there were a number of smaller fry in the politics drawn before the Grand Jury room. Superintendent Dresser of the telephone company was on hand, as usual. He and the leading politicians wanted to be excused, but District Attorney Moran declined to release them. The politicians were particularly wrathy on account of its being primary day and they wanted to be on the job in their districts.

A Ward 4 politician named McFarlane was the first one called before the jury. He was formerly a sub-foreman in the employ of the company. O'Toole followed him.

TRAIN CREWS ON STAND IN CANAAN PROBE

CONCORD, N. H., Sept. 24.—Attended by so large a crowd that the hearing had to be adjourned from the headquarters of the commission to Walker Hall, the investigation into the causes of the wreck at West Canaan a week ago last Sunday, by which twenty-five lives were lost, was begun to-day by the members of the board of railroad commissioners.

In calling the hearing to order, Chairman Henry M. Putney of Manchester, the man who said that the investigation would not be taken up until public sentiment had been cooled, said that the board proposed to thoroughly investigate the cause of this wreck.

Among those present as witnesses were Operator John S. Greeley of West Canaan who denies that he is responsible for the wreck, but on whom the blame rested according to the railroad authorities. He was represented by General Frank S. Streeter, professional counsel. Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, head of the Christian Science church.

General Streeter is determined that Greeley shall not be prosecuted in any way.

Train Dispatcher James A. Brawley who sent the orders from Concord as a result of which the two trains came together is represented by Edwin G. Leach. Another witness is Operator J. H. Maher from Pine River Junction.

Both train crews were present. They included Conductor B. S. Lawrence, Engineer Elijah Shurtleff, Fireman Hiram G. Carl and Brakeman Albert A. Cowan and M. P. Wallace of the freight train No. 267, which was given orders to take the time of train No. 30, the Quebec express. The crew of the latter present of the hearing were Conductor Frank G. Brown, Engineer John P. Callahan, Fireman T. J. Little, and Brakeman H. R. Pike. Brakeman F. H. Ryan of the passenger, who was seriously injured, has not yet left the hospital. Clarence Littlefield, a Boston & Maine brakeman, who was not on duty but who was riding in the baggage car of the express, was also summoned.

COAKLEY QUERIES HARDING

Councilman Closely Cross-Examined by Lawyer for Doyle.

DENIES ANY CASH OFFER

that Mr Doyle in any way suggested paying his asser on account of that night.

Attorney Coakley then read from the stenogr ph of Mr. Moran, in which Moran said the day Harding came to his office he urged him to sit down to a table and write out the exact statement that Mr. Doyle made to him. He, Harding, replied:

"I DIDN'T HAVE TO."

Q—Why did you refuse to write out that statement?

A—I never came after some deliberation. I was independent, and I knew I didn't have to.

Q—Did you know when you went up there that you didn't have to tell the district attorney anything at all? A—I knew it in the afternoon.

Q—Why did you tell at all? A—Well, I saw Mr. Moran was the prosecuting officer and he had discovered a crime, and it was a good citizen it was my duty to tell all that I knew and help him in his prosecution.

Q—Did that same reason apply to your sitting down and writing out the statement? A—I was independent, and I didn't like the way that he treated me and I was antagonistic towards him.

Q—As a good citizen, whose duty it was to help out the prosecuting officer, by telling the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, why didn't you sit down and write out that truth when Mr. Moran asked you to do it? A—He didn't ask me that way.

Q—That is not an answer. Why didn't you do it? A—I was independent and antagonistic. I knew I didn't have to.

Q—Did you think that that written statement would help him? A—I didn't think it would help him any more, because he already had my statement.

DIDN'T KNOW THE REASON.

Q—Didn't Mr. Moran already told you that he thought you were a liar? A.—Yes.

Q—Sir, Mr. Harding, wasn't the reason that Mr. Moran asked you to make your statement in writing so that you couldn't lie again the next day? You knew that was the reason, for his stenographer told you so, didn't you? A.—No, I didn't know that.

Q—Isn't it true, Mr. Harding, that you didn't want to be bound by your own handwriting and could lie out of your statement the next day? A.—No.

Then followed a series of questions which brought out the information that Mr. Harding did not consider it improper for Mr. Doyle to offer to fix up streets in his ward. The witness thought, however, that a moral wrong had been done him when Mr. Doyle offered to help him.

AS TO "MORAL WRONG."

Attorney Coakley asked him to explain what he meant by a "moral wrong," and suggested that a moral wrong might be an offer from a Democrat to a Republican. The cross-examiner struck a funny vein here. He talked about bold, bad Democrats, and truly good Republicans, and the court room roared.

"How old are you?" he asked the witness.

"Twenty-six," said Harding.

"My! as old as that?" asked Coakley.

Then the lawyer attempted to get from the witness the history of the caucus of the Republican members previous to the passing of the loan bill. Harding denied any knowledge of a caucus, and when asked if he didn't know that such a caucus was held at the Hotel Bellevue, said he didn't know whether it was at the Bellevue or the Ball-in-Hand.

"You know better than that, Mr. Harding," said Coakley. "The Ball-in-Hand is a cheap barroom. Republicans never hold their caucuses in places like that.

Mr. Coakley then replied anew to an attempt to get from Harding a statement as to the exact date and hour of his alleged interview with Superintendent Doyle.

Q—As a matter of fact, you told certain persons that you never had a word with Doyle? A—Yes.

Q—You know Lieutenant Lee? (Coakley pointed to the police officer on his left.) A—Yes.

Q—Did he come to your office and tell you that some councilman was offered $500 for his vote? A.—I cannot say. I don't remember.

Q—Did he say that you were the man? A.—Not to my knowledge.

TOLD HIM ALL HE KNEW.

Q—At the time you were talking to Mr. Lee did you consider it your duty to tell him everything about the bribery, or alleged bribery? A.—Yes.

Q—Did you tell him all you knew? A.—Yes.

Q—Did Mr. Lee ask you if anyone asked you to vote "Yes"? A.—I don't remember.

Q—Will you state positively to this jury that Lieutenant Lee did not ask you if you asked "Yes" A.—No.

Q—Did Lieutenant Lee ask you if Mr Doyle offered any inducement for your voting for the bill? A.—I don't recall.

Q—Did Lieutenant Lee ask "Did Superintendent Doyle and you (Harding) talk together on the evening of the loan bill, and did you say that Mr. Doyle knows better than to talk to me? A.—I don't remember.

Asked About Loan Bill.

Mr. Harding in his direct testimony said he lives at No. 3 Clement street, Dorchester, and was elected as a Republican to the Common Council last December.

"Tell the jury," said Mr. McGettrick, "what was said between you and the defendant about the loan bill."

"I met him in the Council chamber and went to the anteroom, where I met Doyle and Alderman Draper. The latter asked me how I was going to vote on the bill, and I said against it. Mr. Draper moved away then, and the defendant asked me why I was going to vote against the bill.

"I told him principally because I objected to the item calling for the appropriation of $400,000. Doyle then said to me: 'You want street repaired in your ward, and I can fix them for you if you will vote for the loan bill.' If the loan bill is passed the money will be available to fix up streets.'

Feared Political Injury.

"I told him that if I voted for the loan bill it would injure me politically in my ward, as my constituents would want me to explain. Mr. Doyle then told me not to worry, declaring that he was a strong man, a power in politics, and if I needed financial assistance in my campaign to come to him; he would give it to me, and political assistance, too, if I voted for the bill.

"Hearing the roll being called in the council chamber, and being anxious to be recorded, I left Mr. Doyle and started back to the chamber. As I left him he said: 'That man you spoke of above is a bankrupter.' I then entered the council chamber and I voted against the loan bill."

HOT BATTLES WAGED TO-DAY AT THE BOSTON PRIMARIES

Campaign Manager Buckley has felt called upon to say has fostered suspicion.

Boston will send 152 delegates to the Democratic State convention. They will all be elected to-day. Whatever men claim that they will elect all but thirty-four of them, and that they have already 200 delegates outside of Boston.

In Boston and the ten other cities and three towns to elect Democratic delegates there are to be 295 chosen. Hartlett hopes are based mostly on their success in these places. The Bartlett claim is that he is sure of sixty Boston delegates. Politicians regard this city as the Whitney stronghold of the State.

To-day joint primaries of all the parties are being held in Boston, Cambridge, Chelsea, Waltham, Gloucester, Lawrence, Lowell, Medford, Newton, Quincy, Somerville, Groveland and Middleboro, and, as there seems to be opposition to Mr. Hagen, it looks as if he would be the choice for the nomination for Governor at the hands of the Independence League.

Last night the two candidates for the nomination closed their preliminary campaigns by speaking in various sections of Boston.

Whitney Scores Lawson.

In Brighton last night Mr. Whitney paid his respects to Thomas W. Lawson, who has threatened in event of the nomination of Whitney, to follow the candidate into every ballfield in the State and tell why he should not be elected.

Mr. Whitney said that Mr. Lawson appears on the stump against him, the Democratic candidate, as either a paid or official mudslinger or republican him. He also accused Mr. Lawson of trying to bribe the Democratic party by his offer of $10,000 to defeat him for the nomination. In bitter invective, he scores Lawson for his advertising methods, and intimated that he was seeking fresh notoriety at the expense in his opposition to the Whitney candidacy.

In Boston the polls are opened at 6 a. m. and close at 4 p. m. Delegates will be chosen to the State convention, the councilor conventions (second and fourth districts) and the county and district attorney; also the direct nomination the voters will choose candidates for councilor in the third district; also candidates for Senator and Representatives in the General Court and for members of the State committee for the ensuing year.

NOTHING TO BRING OUT VOTE IN "DEAR OLD NORTH END"

Ward 6, Mayor Fitzgerald's "dear old North End," complained of much. A single list of delegates appeared for all the conventions. There was no "scrap," and only 1,000 went to work at the polls. Nothing moving with no thought of the polls.

Senator Edward W. Dixon, skipper of the fishing boat King Philip, was unopposed for a second term in the State Senate. Last year he had to fight the Lomasney forces, behind Daniel J. Riley, Commodore Dixon, casting his ballot early, looked like the happiest man in town.

Booths in the eight precincts were opened at 6 o'clock. At 9 o'clock, when, according to all the precedents, the bulk of the vote should have been in, it was said that only about 40 per cent. of the registered vote had known up. There was one list for the county convention, one for the councillor and one for District Attorney. "Nothing at all to bring out the vote," the officials said.

HOT FIGHT ON IN CHARLESTOWN OVER SENATE NOMINATION

The polls in Charlestown's three wards were opened at 6 o'clock this morning and a heavy vote is being got out.

Wards 2, 4 and 5 will undoubtedly go for Whitney," said Judge Corbett, who was around bright and early watching things. And that seemed to be the general sentiment, so far as Charlestown was concerned.

But the hot and merry fight to-day in Charlestown is in the Seventh District, where Thomas J. Dougherty of Ward 4, East Boston; Representative Richard Teeling of Ward 4, Charlestown, and George Monahan of Ward 3, Charlestown, are after the Senatorial nomination. The Charlestown politicians think that the whole fight lies between Teeling and Monahan.

COX AND GLIDDEN IN HOT FIGHT AT EAST BOSTON CAUCUSES

In Wards 1 and 2, the East Boston section, both parties are getting out a heavy vote, because there are lively contests on both sides in these wards. In Ward 1 there is a Democratic fight for representative and a Republican fight for Governor's Council. Albert E. Cox of Malden and Walter S. Glidden of Somerville are the candidates for the nomination for Governor's Council. It is likely that Cox will carry the East Boston ward, because his business connections are there.

There are five candidates for the Democratic nomination for Representative—Thomas J. Giblin, James E. McGuire, Joseph E. Morley, Robert E. Sexton and Thomas M. Rice. The machine has indorsed Morley, the present Representative, and Rice.

The Democrats have contests for both the House and the Senate in Ward 2. For the Senate the candidates are Thomas F. Doherty, George F. Monahan and Richard S. Perkins. Doherty is a local man and is getting out a heavy vote.

Four seek the nomination for Representative—Representative Michael H. Fitzgerald, Representative John F. Sullivan, James J. Collins and Bernard F. Hanrahan. The machine has indorsed Fitzgerald and Hanrahan. Sullivan, who is popular, is out trying to beat the machine, and the indications are for the largest vote on record here.

BRICKLEY OUT TO BEAT 'HONEST JOHN' QUINN IN WARD 7

In Ward 7 Bartholomew A. Brickley and "Honest John" Quinn are renewing their fight of last year for the Democratic nomination for Representative.

Ward 9 is the scene of one of the bitter est political fights ever waged in this city. Charlestown is in the Seventh District, where Thomas J. Dougherty of Ward 4, East Boston; Representative Richard Teeling of Ward 4, Charlestown, and George Monahan of Ward 3, Charlestown, are after the Senatorial nomination. The Charlestown politicians think that the whole fight lies between Teeling and Monahan.

WARD 13 WORKING FOR RECORD VOTE IN SENATE FIGHT

Extremely light voting marked the opening of the primaries in Wards 13, 14 and 15, the three South Boston wards, early to-day. The lack of interest is most evident in Ward 15, where in many of the precincts only about seventy-five votes were cast up to 8 o'clock. In Ward 14 things were livelier. Here the average vote was a hundred up to 8 o'clock. In Ward 13 the interest is most keen, and the fight is on the Moynihan-Linehan fight for State Senator were early marshalling their forces and trying to bring out a record vote.

In precinct 7, Ward 15, Senator Linehan was himself out early, arriving at the polling booth as soon as it opened. He cast his own vote about 7:30.

CURLEYITES BRAND LANERGAN AS FOE OF THE DEMOCRACY

Political followers of the Curleys to-day are flooding the fourth senatorial district, comprising Wards 7, 9, 12 and 17, with circulars denouncing John F. Lanergan as a foe of Democracy. Lanergan is contesting for the nomination with Tom Curley, the present incumbent.

EXTREMELY LIGHT VOTE IN WARD 20; WHITNEY FIGHT ON

It was estimated after some hours of voting that there would be about 800 Republicans and 200 Democratic votes cast in Ward 10. The voting was extremely light in the early hours, with the Republicans showing the more interest. Newman Lochead, candidate of the Lincoln Republicans is opposing Representatives Ferber and Nichols, who seek re-election. There are two Whitney delegations in the field.

FROTHINGHAM AND COLE BATTLE FOR WARD 11 VICTORY

In Ward 11 the one interesting contest was that between former Police Commissioner Charles H. Cole and Henry Frothingham to carry the ward for the gubernatorial delegation.

Colonel Cole headed the delegation pledged to General Bartlett, while Mr. Frothingham was working for Whitney. Both men were out at an early hour, drumming every possible voter in the ward to one of the polling places. The vote will be heavy on this account. Grafton D. Cushing and Myron E. Pierce are supposed for re-election to the House of Representatives.

HUNT YEGGS AS CAR BARN ROBBERS

Pinkerton agents are investigating the mysterious theft of $800 from the safe at the Boston & Northern car barns on the State boulevard at Swampscott. It is generally believed that there is some connection between the disappearance of the $800 and the blowing up of the safe by a gang of supposed yeggs just a year and a week previous. The $800 disappeared some time between 1:30 and 6 o'clock yesterday morning.

GALE TIES UP YALE; STORM PERIL TO SHIPS

Buffeted by the heavy easterly gale that swept the New England coast last night, twenty fishing vessels hurried into port so far as known there were no accidents. The gale caused much delay in shipping.

The new turbine steamer Yale, which left New York at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon and was due here at 8 o'clock this morning, was forced to put in at Block Island and will not arrive until 1 or 2 o'clock this afternoon.

The steamship Menominee, Red Star line, from Antwerp, with 114 passengers, arrived at Quarantine in the height of the gale and lay at anchor until after daylight. She reported no serious weather.

On board were Professor J. B. S. McVane of Harvard, accompanied by his wife and daughter; Professor J. F. S. Starpest and other teachers and clergymen from Greater Boston, returning from their Summer excursions abroad. The Menominee had a very light cargo, not more than 500 tons.

COAL PROBE TO BE RESUMED FRIDAY

Public hearings upon the coal contracts investigation will be resumed by the Finance Commission Friday, according to Secretary J. W. Farley of the Commission. In the meantime, he says, summonses will be issued for nearly a hundred witnesses, including coal dealers, city officials and employes of the penal and pauper institutions.

Boy Witness Slain, Declare Relatives in Searles Mystery

STRANGE DEATH OF ROY HUTCHINS PROBED. TRAGEDY WITHIN TRAGEDY.

FARMINGTON, Me., Sept. 24.—While Harvey Searles faces trial for the slaying of his beautiful young wife, whom he shot down in jealous rage over her friendship for his younger brother, a tragedy within a tragedy is unfolded in his case.

Evidence has accumulated within the past twenty-four hours to indicate that Roy Hutchins, the chief witness against Searles, must have been murdered.

Dr. Makepeace, one of the surgeons who performed the autopsy, told the AMERICAN to-day that he had discovered a mark on the front of the skull, indicating that there may be a blood clot on the brain. A further investigation will be made.

At first it was stated almost positively that the youth had taken his own life. Dr. Makepeace said to-day that he was not now certain that it was a case of suicide. The surgeon spoke very guardedly and the admission is considered very significant.

Clews Indicating Murder.

Other circumstances have been turned up which have tended to turn the theory of suicide into one of murder. The boy's bicycle was found on the highway, twelve feet from the shore. If he took his own life, young Hutchins must have left his wheel in the road, where it was sure to be found, jumped over a barbed wire fence and plunged into the water. The position of his body was such as to lead to the theory of murder.

Sheriff Coolidge has decided that a further investigation must be made, but he is without funds to prosecute it. The indications are that a town meeting will be called at Chesterfield to-morrow or Wednesday night to offer a reward for the solution of the mystery and to authorize the sheriff to go ahead.

What Motive for Suicide.

Why Hutchins, who was only eighteen years old and a student at the High school full of life and spirits and in the best of health, should commit suicide, passes the belief of those who knew the lad. There is only one circumstance they can think of.

The father of Terry Batchelder, one of Hutchins's friends, had demanded $100 of him because of some slanderous stories it is alleged Hutchins had told. The elder Batchelder admits this. Terry Batchelder, however, denies that he ever said, previous to the finding of the body, that Hutchins would never be seen alive again.

George B. Weysogh, a prominent manufacturer, says that Hutchins tried to borrow $25 to make a partial payment to somebody. The day after Hutchins's body was found, Weysogh's barn was burned. This adds to the mysteries, or to the coincidences of the affair.

Believe Boy Murdered.

Hutchins's parents say that they believe he was murdered. They are making an investigation themselves and insist that the authorities also go to the bottom of the case.

Young Hutchins was with Harvey Searles, the slide who killed the Rangeley guide, shot down his young wife, Phyllis. He was to have been the principal witness for the State. When Searles killed his wife, he also shot his brother, Jesse, who was nearby, and himself, but the two men recovered. It was only a few weeks ago as the time scheduled for the trial drew near that Hutchins's body was dragged from the stream.

War of Women in Divorce Suit, Broker Accuses Fellow Broke

Two Beautiful Wives Figure in Exciting Marital Drama.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Two of the most prominent families of the fashionable colony at Red Bank, N. J., whose heads are rich New York stock brokers, are involved in a domestic tangle which at present looks very much like a double divorce suit, with a $100,000 alienation of affections suit as an added feature.

William Henry Van Vleck, the younger of the two men, has already had divorce papers served upon his wife, a dainty, fair-haired little woman. Charles M. Currie, the elder broker, is named in the suit.

Mrs. Currie, a handsome, statuesque matron, also blue-eyed and fair-haired, has not yet served papers upon her husband, but she said yesterday she was considering that course and that Mrs. Van Vleck's name would occupy a conspicuous place in the documents.

The damage suit, according to both women, is being prepared by Mr. Van Vleck, and notification will be served upon Mr. Currie as soon as the legal forms can be made out.

Moonlight Rides Figure.

Moonlight rides behind Currie's pair of thoroughbred trotters figure largely in all the complaints. It likewise figures in a number of interesting letters written to Currie and signed "Laura," which is the Christian name of Mrs. Van Vleck.

The two brokers are close friends. Van Vleck has departed from Red Bank and taken an apartment in this city. Mr. Currie is still in his country home, but it is said, is leading a semi-solitary existence.

There is little reticence, however, on the part of the wives. Both, too, said they were going to fight for their rights. Mrs. Van Vleck was much more complacent than her former friend, although she's the one accused. She laughed away the charges of having led Currie from his home, and placidly declared that there must be another "Laura" in Currie's life, as she had certainly not written these letters.

Sketch of Mrs. Currie.

Mrs. Currie's Story.

"The trouble began several months ago," said Mrs. Currie, as she sat on the veranda of her charming home, overlooking the broad Shrewsbury. A powerful motorboat, driven by her by her husband, floated at a landing in front of her, and a big touring car, another gift, reposed in a garage nearby. Mr. Currie was close at hand, but made no effort either to take part in the talk or to restrain it.

"It was one night when there was a dinner party and dance at Long Branch. I wasn't able to start out with Mr. Currie and he telephoned that he would bring, if I would come, he said, I should send along a single horse and a carriage for them. If not, I should send up a double team and a larger carriage. I wanted to go, but misunderstood the instructions. I sent the single team—and waited at home all evening for my husband to come for me. He didn't. He took the double team, and it was all hours before he returned. I learned then that he was out with that little Mrs. Van Vleck. That was only the beginning of a long series of similar rides and meetings.

"I shall certainly appear as a witness against my husband," Mrs. Currie continued, "in any proceeding that is brought in court. I am not sure yet whether I shall ask for a divorce or not. I am to make a decision with my lawyer on Wednesday. I certainly cannot see what my husband saw to admire in Mrs. Van Vleck.

"A different sort of spirit was manifested by the "other woman" when she told her story.

"Let me tell you that Charlie Currie is a much better husband to his wife since I have been his friend," she declared. "That is all I was or am—his friend. Yet, I did drive with him, and met him frequently in a social way; but that was all."

She was asked if Mr. Currie thought she was his affinity, or vice versa.

Denies She's "Affinity."

"Affinities? Bosh!" she laughed. "Mr. Currie is a sensible man, and understands and sympathizes with me in this affair.

"Unfortunately it already has occasioned a good deal of notoriety here. In fact, I can hardly go down the street for a drive without feeling that I am being commented upon and unjustly criticised by all my neighbors. It has become so uncomfortable for me here that I have sold this home and am going to go back to my old home in Brooklyn.

"Mr. Van Vleck himself approved of the occasional drives I took with Mr. Currie," she continued. "He brought him many times to the house as our mutual guest. I was simply amazed when I was served with papers by my husband. I shall fight it, certainly.

"Mrs. Currie has said she is willing to go on the witness stand and give testimony against me. That does not worry me in the slightest. Understand, Mr. Currie and I were not affinities. Nor does anything more than a purely platonic friendship exist between us. My husband may try to get a divorce if he chooses, but I am sure he can prove none of the charges he has made against me.

"Mr. Currie, whom I have seen since at my attorney's office, has declared that he will also help to clear the unjust accusations my husband has made."

GRAFTERS' LAST HOPE BLASTED BY COURTS

JURY WHICH SENT SAN FRANCISCO PLUNDERERS TO PRISON DECLARED LEGAL.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 24.—The State Supreme Court has sustained the validity of the Grand Jury that indicted former Mayor Eugene E. Schmitz, boss "Abe" Ruef, and all the rest of the associated grafters.

Aside from the actual conviction of the bribery ring, this constitutes the greatest victory yet scored by the prosecution, for in attacking the validity of the Grand Jury the defendants had hoped to do it foolish with one blow the entire fabric of indictments and convictions and walk forth from their cells free men.

The basis of the attack was a legal technicality. It was contended that inasmuch as the Grand Jury had brought the indictments after its allotted period of existence, all of its acts subsequent to a certain date were null and void.

The prosecution had maintained that so long as the Grand Jury had remained in session continuously its acts were thoroughly valid.

The latter was the view taken by Supreme Court Judge Lawlor when he denied the motion to set aside the indictments, and that view is now sustained by the State Supreme Court.

Had the decision been in favor of the defendants it would have meant freedom not only for Schmitz and Ruef, but also for Patrick Calhoun, Thornwell Mullaney, Tirey L. Ford, William Abbott, Frank Drum, Eugene De Sabla, John Martin and Louis Glass.

Thomas Sheehan of No. 58 Cabot street, walked half a mile to the Relief Hospital and asked to have the wound treated. He did not realize the consequence of his injury. Today he is on the dangerous list.

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF YOUNG WOMAN

Unusual circumstances surrounding the death of Annie Kiletta, 188 Second street, Chelsea, have lead to an investigation by the Medical Examiner Dr. Guild, who, attended the woman and refused to give a death certificate. The body is at the North Square Street Morgue. The woman was married but did not live with her husband.

SKULL FRACTURED, WALKS TO HOSPITAL

With his skull fractured by an accidental blow from a pick held by his cousin, Thomas Sheehan of No. 58 Cabot street, walked half a mile to the Relief Hospital and asked to have the wound treated. He did not realize the consequence of his injury. Today he is on the dangerous list.

BOLD HEN THIEVES LOAD UP THEIR WAGON

MILFORD, N. H., Sept. 24.—Daring hen thieves robbed Charles Curtis's hennery. After taking out several fine pullets, they found it would be much easier to load them if they could back their wagon nearer the door of the henhouse, which is situated in close proximity to the main buildings. To do this it was necessary to remove a wire fence.

INDEPENDENCE LEAGUE PLANS FOR BIG BATTLE

Holding caucuses side by side with the older parties, Independence Leaguers throughout the State are enthusiastically preparing for a battle that will surprise and startle the old parties. In spite of every conceivable obstacle that old-line politicians could put in their way in Boston—for instance, refusing to open the registrar's office for an hour in the evening that wage earners might declare a transfer of allegiance—the League workers have done so well that there is a feeling of confidence up and down the line.

The Independence League State Convention will be held on Thursday of next week in Faneuil Hall.

LEGISLATIVE TICKET NAMED BY LEAGUE IN SPRINGFIELD

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 24.—Supporting an ideal quartet of legislative nominees, the Independence League in Springfield will do better than duplicate its successes of a year ago. The caucuses resulted as follows:

Third Hampden District, Edward C. Duffy; Fourth District, John C. Bennett; Fifth District, Walter J. LaFrancis; Sixth District, George W. Curtis, also chosen a member of the State Committee.

There will be no senatorial convention. Satisfied with the splendid record of William P. Hayes in his first year on Beacon Hill, the Independence League has gladly endorsed him. Representative Bennett and Mr. LaFrancis are likewise on the Democratic ticket.

LEAGUERS SELECT STATE DELEGATES AT NEWBURYPORT

NEWBURYPORT, Sept. 24.—At the Independence League caucus held in Central Labor Union Hall last night the following delegates to the State convention were elected: Paul J. Leigh, John Hudon, William Nice, George A. Hoff, Timothy H. McCarthy, Timothy P. B. Houghton and Edgar J. Batchelder.

"I WILL NOT RETIRE," SAYS JOHN REDMOND

John O'Callaghan, secretary of the United Irish League of America, declares that there is no ground for the report that John Redmond had decided to quit public life and that John Dillon had joined the Sinn Fein movement. Mr. O'Callaghan has received a cablegram from Mr. Redmond, stating that the report was a ridiculous fabrication.

Secretary O'Callaghan says:

"The statement contained in an alleged cablegram from Dublin published in certain newspapers in this country stating that John Redmond had determined to quit public life and retire from the chairmanship of the Irish party, and that John Dillon is the latest Nationalist to join the revolt in favor of the Sinn Fein movement, is unqualifiedly false.

"The responsible officials of the United Irish League cabled the substance of the published statement to Mr. Redmond, and received from him a cablegram from Dublin, which reads as follows:

"'O'Callaghan, Boston: Cable received. The story is a ridiculous fabrication.—Redmond.'"

PEACE MADE IN MOROCCO

PARIS, Sept. 24.—Peace has been declared in Morocco.

The delegates of three important tribes have accepted the French overtures and will see that the terms of the agreement are carried out.

Hostilities are at an end.

The terms include the unconditional surrender by the Moors of all their guns, against which the Kaids are holding out, but upon which the French authorities insist.

GIRLS WARNED NOT TO FLIRT WITH BOYS

ALLENTOWN, Pa., Sept. 24.—The Rev. J. P. Webb, rector, and Father Gaffney, curate of the Church of the Immaculate Conception, in their sermons, warned the young women of the parish against too close association with students of Lehigh University.

LYNN SCHOOLS TOO SMALL FOR PUPILS

LYNN, Sept. 24.—The School Board is trying to find seating capacity in the different rooms of the city. It has been found that one teacher was caring for sixty-eight pupils, where the rules allow but forty-eight to one instructor.

$10,000 FOR HONOR

To the Democratic Party:

If Henry M. Whitney is the candidate for the Democratic Party of Massachusetts for the highest office of the people

I will begin to biograph throughout the Commonwealth, the day after his nomination, a series of ebon acts of dishonor.

I relish the anticipation as much as any pork-and-beans Yankee does a chop-suey go-as-you-please contest. The result can be only soiled napkins, stained atmosphere and—doctors' bills.

To avoid this unpleasantry, to prevent the charge of

"He is a Republican working for a Republican victory" I make the Democratic Party this offer:—

If any other than a common corruptionist is the standard bearer of the Democratic Party in the coming contest I will pay over to the Democratic State Committee, to be used in its campaign expenses, the sum of $10,000, and will refrain from aiding in any way, other than by voting the Republican ticket, the defeat of such candidate.

To Democratic Credential Sellers:

I respectfully ask all credential holders who are contemplating the sale of same to drop me a line before clinching for disposal of the goods.

I am informed that the present quotation for anti-Whitney credentials is $50 per or $200 for bunches of three.

A Democratic credential to the present convention is a twig-pal to a Dixie Land persimmon—they increase in value while hanging; plucked, their value is entirely dependent on the pucker demand.

To Citizens of Massachusetts:

Every attendant at my coming meetings will be presented with a copy of the edition de luxe of "The Bribe," exquisitely printed on Japan paper with the leering devil rampant on the cover. Each copy will have an estimate tag attached. Each man, woman and grown child in the State will have the privilege of one estimate of the number of votes by which Mr. Whitney will be defeated. These estimate tags will be collected during each meeting at which I speak, and after election the one nearest the correct number will receive the sum of $1000; second nearest, $500; third nearest, $300; fourth nearest, $200.

WOMAN FOILS KIDNAPPER OF LITTLE CHILD

Mother Screams as Stranger Tries to Steal Her Baby in Providence.

POLICE SEEK ABDUCTOR

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Sept. 24.—The police of Providence are making a thorough search today for a stranger man about forty years of age who yesterday made a daring attempt to kidnap two-year-old Lillian Hannigan from her home, No. 766 North Main street, only to be driven away just in time by the little one's mother.

The man looked for by the police visited the home occupied by Mrs. Hannigan, her mother, and a family named Simpson, who lived in the second floor. He pretended to be a salesman for a soap agent and had a book of samples, from which he asked Mrs. Simpson and later Mrs. Hannigan to select patterns, which he claimed the proprietor of the house intended to have him sell on.

Later yesterday afternoon, about 3:30 o'clock, the stranger returned, giving as his excuse the fact that he had left a satchel and his book of samples. The pretended agent had induced a man who gave his name to the police as Frank Hammond of No. 852 North Main street to accompany him, saying that he expected to have from the families in the house when he tried to get his satchel of tools.

Rolling into the kitchen where Mrs. Hannigan was at work fixing a hat, the man tried to get little Lillian to kiss him. He made a move as though to cross the room, and pretended to trip over Mrs. Hannigan's foot. In the confusion he seized the child and was running off with her when the mother recovered herself, and, screaming for help, darted after the man.

She seized him, and so strong had fear and anger made her that the kidnapper was glad to release the little girl and make his escape. She saw the man disappear down North Main street.

BIG FOOD FAIR TO OPEN OCT. 7

October 7 is the date set for the opening of the New England Food Fair and House Furnishing Exposition at Mechanics Building. Every available foot of space in this great exposition building will be utilized and at that the 350 exhibitors will have no more than the necessary room.

The free attractions take up a great deal of space, for there are more of them this year than ever before at any fair or exposition ever held in New England. More than $25,000 is being spent to provide free entertainment for those who visit the coming Food Fair and not a single penny of it is being wasted.

The Food Fair this year is going to get away from the beaten track, and there is every reason to believe that it will be the most successful ever given.

Wenham Girl Who Won Irish Estate Worth $20,000, Says 'I'm Happiest Maid in World'

Nellie Mitchell, Wenham girl, who won Knockmeane estate in Roscommon, Ireland.

"I Am Going to Travel," Declares Pretty Nellie Mitchell, Now Mistress of Knockmeane.

Nellie Mitchell, now a maid in the family of Mrs. Thomas P. Pingree of Wenham, is soon to become mistress of the famous Knockmeane estate at Roscommon, Ireland. She has learned that a ticket for which she paid $1 during a bazaar two years ago for the benefit of the church at Roscommon has won the estate valued at $20,000.

Miss Mitchell is a pretty Irish girl of the brunette type, who came from County Sligo, where her father and mother now live. "I bought the ticket from Thomas Mulhern, who is employed by R. L. Agassiz," she said. "He knew the estate, which was offered as first prize, and as we were glad to help the church I bought a ticket. It was said the lucky one would be some one in this country, and I guess I am that lucky one. I'll write and tell my parents about my good fortune and then I will go over to Ireland and see the place. I don't know what I will do with it. I would like to travel and see the world. I am the happiest maid in all the world."

SAFE LOOTERS BAFFLE POLICE

SWAMPSCOTT, Sept. 24.—The police of this town are completely baffled in their attempts to clear up the mystery surrounding the robbery at the car barns of the Boston & Northern street railway and the theft of $700 from the office safe.

The sleuths are working on the theory that some one connected with the company is responsible, as Night Watchman Hale, who locked up the money, declares that he was on duty within sight of the safe all night with the exception of half an hour when he was called to the barns to make some repairs.

All the men connected with the road from the highest official down to the track laborers have been placed on the rack, but they have been unable to throw any light on the mystery and none of them can recall having seen any strangers around during the night or morning following.

Another strange feature of the case is the fact that this is the third break within a short time at the Swampscott barns.

The men who made the haul were apparently baffled suddenly in their work, for two of the bags in which the money was tied were untouched.

WIDELY KNOWN PRIEST IS DEAD

Rev. Bernard Cullen, one of the best-known Redemptorist missionary workers in New England, was stricken while walking through the corridors of the Roxbury Mission house, 1,545 Tremont street, and died just after the last rites of the church had been administered. He had long been in ill-health. He was generally beloved by Catholics throughout New England.

Born in County Cavan, Ireland, fifty-seven years ago, he made his novitiate at Annapolis in 1887. In 1892 he was ordained by Cardinal Gibbons. He came to Boston after three years of missionary work in Brooklyn, and recently made a tour of the missions in the South, hoping to regain his health. His nearest surviving relative is a sister, Mrs. Booth, of New York.

HIPLESS GIRL MAKES HER BOW BEFORE PUBLIC

Venus-Like Forms Now Things of the Past, Fashion Makers Declare.

STOUT MAIDS ARE HAPPY

Good-bye, dear old Gibson girl; farewell, Kangaroo.
With the straight front girl you became passee.
When Miss Hipless here is view.
No more will the lean gon-gon when you girls are about.
For the Hipless girl is coming in, while you are going out.

Ye aesthetic lovers of the symetrical and graceful, well have ye cause to mourn. For the Venus like figures ye have been wont to admire or aspire to, as was the case; the ones ye have seen outlined in natty suits, will soon be distorted into a shapeless mass.

At least so it seems to the critical eye of an AMERICAN reporter who witnessed the demonstration of the hipless gown at the Dressmakers Convention last night in Horticultural Hall.

No more does the figure of the pretty maiden seems to curve in graceful lines in the hipless gown there is but little grace and few curves. The shapely maiden is no more.

Not Popular with Shapely Women.

A number of Boston's fairest daughters slipped their Venus like forms into the hipless gowns last night, and showed how the woman with the graceful figure can resemble the maid who is fair, fat and forty.

The demonstration showed that the woman with the forty-four waist will show to as good advantage as the girl with the small waist and symetrical curves.

And the witnesses of the demonstration They were of all ages and sizes, and their faces depicted their innermost feelings. Fear was evident on the face of the fifty-six girl, for she saw her glory fading away, while the damsel who refuses to be weighed saw liberation from a life of undesired corsets.

With the shapely women the hipless gown will not prove popular. It may be adopted by the ultra fashionable, who insist on being as well dressed as their friends, but with the rank and file of women, it will never be in demand.

At least such was the impression gained last night. And it can be said, almost without fear of contradiction, that the Gibson girl will wear a smile before she adopts the hipless gown.

Everybody Will Look Alike.

"Why," said one fair creature last night, "everybody will look alike. How will Charley recognize me across the street at night if I wear one of them? Not for me."

Whether they prove popular or not, the creations shown last night were closely examined by many. A Paquin gown was greatly admired. It is of delft blue satin chiffon broadcloth, piped and button-holed in satin to match the cloth. The cuffs and yokes are hand embroidered with lace, with gold threads running through.

A Ducet gown proved popular. It is a combination of liberty satin and net. The feature of this gown lies in its being hand embroidered with a silk floss which makes it a very old and new feature for this season's trimming. This gown is suitable for afternoon teas, whist parties or as a carriage gown.

Some of the Gowns.

One of the prettiest gowns exhibited was one from Francis. It is a walking costume with tunic shaped skirt. The sleeves and waist are tucked, showing the long sleeve effect. The costume is made of gobin blue. It is made of mirage silk, a new silk on the market for this class of gowns.

A Driecil gown of carol red chiffon broadcloth was critically examined. The waist is trimmed, with a high black satin girdle, thus giving the gown an empire effect. It is slightly bloused.

All the gowns shown last night are short waisted, thus producing the hipless effect desired by the season's fashion. The thirty gowns and cloaks demonstrated last night were beautifully made of harmonious effects, and were highly admired.

PEARL WORTH $500 FOUND IN A CLAM

RUMFORD FALLS, Me., Sept. 24.—Sherman R. L. Melcher exhibited to a local jeweler to-day a pearl which he found in a fresh water clam and was advised that it was worth $500. It was found in a muddy brook, but Mr. Melcher declines to state in what section of this county it was picked up. It is round, has the natural pearl color and weighs ten grains. Arthur F. Morrison, a local business man, also found one which is valued at $50.

LEAGUE CONFERENCE TO INCLUDE MANY STATES

NATIONAL EXTENSION PROGRAM FOR NEW YORK MEETING.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—The Independence League national conference on the subject of the extension of the Independence League, to be held at the Gilsey House at noon next Friday, promises to be a most representative gathering. It is announced that William Randolph Hearst will preside.

The letter of invitation sent to a limited number of persons in various States says in part:

The Independence League has not only promoted its principles through the victories won by its own organization, but has been a potent force in compelling the older parties to accept those principles and to recognize the rights of the people.

Unity of Action.

We invite you to attend a meeting of our friends to devise means to harmonize the action of the branches of the Independence League of the various States, and to unite that action into a national movement for the advancement of its principles in the largest and most effective manner.

This conference is called as the result of a desire generally expressed throughout the country to the New York League that it take the initiative in organizing into a militant force the believers in the League's principles everywhere.

The invitation is signed by William Randolph Hearst and his associates on the executive committee of the Independence League.

Extension to Be Considered.

It is understood that the chief subject of discussion at the conference will be the feasibility of extending the organization throughout all the States in the Union.

The Independence League has good organizations in Massachusetts, Indiana, Illinois and California, as well as in this State, and there is much activity in many other States. Those who believe that the League movement is what the voters need.

Representation is expected from Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New Jersey, Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Tennessee, Kentucky, South Dakota, California, Iowa, Missouri, Alabama and several other States.

The visitors when they arrive will be invited to attend the State convention of the League the next day in Carnegie Hall.

BARELY AVERTS HARBOR CRASH

That a little fishing schooner is not now at the bottom of Boston Harbor is due to the letting go of both anchors of the British steamship Longships, bringing her to a sudden stop just as the schooner tacked beneath her bows.

The Longships was coming up the harbor to-day when the schooner headed directly into the course of the steamer. Captain Pasher, who was on the bridge, gave orders to drop both anchors and the order was obeyed on the instant, bringing the steamer up with a jerk. The schooner fled to see before her name was learned.

The Longships came in from Sourabaya, Java, with one of the largest cargoes of sugar that ever arrived at this port, 15,000,000 pounds, consigned to the Standard sugar refinery.

WILD RUNAWAY ON BEACON HILL

An unfastened trunk strap on the back of a hack gave the noisy West End and quiet Beacon Hill an exciting twenty minutes to-day, when a pair of horses tore through two streets, demolished the hack, smashed a grocer's cart, tore down an electric light globe, and came within an ace of keeping several children out of school for a week or two.

The hack belonged to M. A. Hanson of No. 32 Charles street. Driver Jim Hinckley got down from the box to fix the trunk strap. The horses started. A Brighton's delivery wagon, standing in front of the grocery at No. 40 West Cedar street, was first bowled over. At West Cedar and Mount Vernon streets the hack tore down an electric light. Winded by the fall, the animals surrendered in Chestnut street.

ROCKEFELLER OF MYSTERY STILL ALIVE

MILWAUKEE, Sept. 24.—Percy Rockefeller, son of William A. Rockefeller, was asked to-day whether his grandfather, William Rockefeller, the mystery of the family, was alive.

"My grandfather is alive and well," he answered.

"Don't you think," queried the reporter, "that it would be a good thing to set at rest the rumors about your grandfather? Where does he live? You know that your uncle, Frank Rockefeller, recently said things about your father and your uncle, John D., accusing them among other things, of keeping your grandfather under cover for purposes of their own."

Young Mr. Rockefeller, smiling, was about to reply, when Mayor Becker whizzed up in his automobile and the young man was away for a ride.

Mr. Rockefeller left for the East this evening. The son of the Standard Oil magnate did not reveal the hiding place of the secrets of his family history.

"That's all right," he said. "You newspaper men seem to have a right to ask any old question you want to. Go ahead and if I can answer you, I shall willingly do so."

It was generally supposed for many years that death had overtaken William Rockefeller, senior, some an old and not understood character in the Northwestern part of New York State, and who, in a modest way, really set the foundations of what is now the great Standard Oil. For several years a rumor has gone about that he was alive, living under cover, at the instance of his sons, for excellent reasons. Several members of the family afterward admitted that he was still living, but they steadfastly declined to disclose his whereabouts, or to tell why he was made such a mystery.

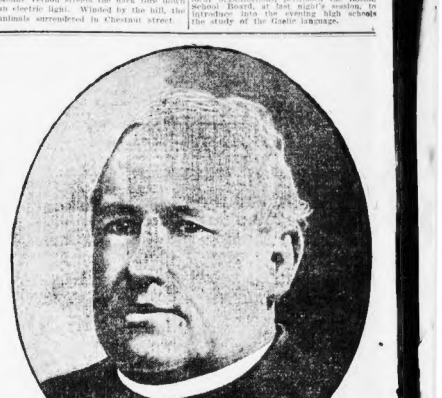
243 PEOPLE SAVED FROM STARVATION

WASHINGTON, Sept. 24.—The thrilling rescue of 243 people from a possible death from exposure and starvation has been reported to the Treasury Department to-day. The shipwrecked people of the ship John Currier were found at Nelsons Lagoon, Unimek Island, one of the desolate and barren islands of the Aleutian group in Alaska waters. The vessel was wrecked on August 9 and the survivor's had only one month's provisions. They have been taken to Seattle by a revenue cutter.

WANT GAELIC IN HUB NIGHT SCHOOLS

Patrick J. O'Daly, superintendent of the Boston night schools, representing several local organizations, petitioned the Boston School Board at its last night's meeting to introduce into the evening high schools the study of the Gaelic language.

Father John's medicine is a Food medicine. All pure nourishment. Free from alcohol and harmful drugs.



Named by the People

Half a century ago, Rev. Father John O'Brien of St. Patrick's Parish, Lowell, Mass., through overwork and exposure, became seriously run down. A cold and stubborn cough and lung trouble threatened his life. An eminent specialist gave Father John, as he was fondly called, a prescription to cure the cold and remove the lung trouble, as well as to build up and strengthen the body. Father John was soon restored to his former health and strength, and he recommended the medicine to his parishioners and friends. Thus it became the family remedy in thousands of homes, and became known as "Father John's Medicine."

Father John recommended the medicine to his parishioners and friends, and because of its merits it became the family remedy in thousands of homes and became known as "Father John's Medicine," having done so much for the people, and was advertised, all with the consent of Father John.

It will cure all throat and lung troubles, prevent Consumption, and make flesh and strength if taken faithfully. It is not a patent medicine and does not contain alcohol or poisonous drugs.

$25,000.00

As a guarantee that the above story of Father John's Medicine is absolutely true, the sum of $25,000 will be given to any charitable institution if it can be shown otherwise.

BLANCHE BATES MORE POPULAR THAN LAST YEAR

In "Girl of Golden West" She Returns to House Full of Enthusiasts.

Despite the rainy weather, Blanche Bates played to a capacity audience at the Majestic Theatre last night in "The Girl of the Golden West," the interesting play by David Belasco of the days of '49. So well appreciated was the work of the vivacious star that she had to respond to calls for a speech at the end of the third act.

This play is all action. From the moment of the card game, which nearly brings on bloodshed, until Minnie, the Girl, rushes out with her outlaw lover, it is rapid movement. The days of '49 provide plenty of opportunities for good live action, and they are certainly taken care of.

Miss Bates returned to the Hub much more popular than when she left Boston last Spring.

The play is a faithful portrayal of the days when the gold fever circulated through the camp. Cuyler Hasting, as the sheriff, made the part second to none to Miss Bates. He was dressed in a tall hat, a frock coat, and his face was as pale as chalk, which gave him a very cold-blooded manner, which he maintained throughout the play. Charles Millward was the base to perfection. In the earlier scenes of the play, where he was supposed to be a rather despicable character, he made us believe that he held the sympathy of all. "The Girl of the Golden West" is certainly worth seeing.

MOVING PICTURES AT BOWDOIN LIKED

Crowded houses greeted "The Shadow Behind the Throne," which was the offering at the Bowdoin Square Theatre yesterday. The moving pictures, a custom inaugurated a week ago, were continued and seemed to be a great success. All of the members of the stock company were seen at their best, especially Clayton Legge and Jane Stuart, who appeared in the leading roles. A rich vein of comedy runs all through the production.

PHENOMENAL ACT AT AUSTIN & STONE'S

Filled to its capacity was the spurious curio hall at Austin & Stone's, where Travis again performed some of those phenomenal acts. He gave a back lift of 2,700 pounds before a half-dozen guidemen; he raised from the platform a 1,500-pound carousel, which he held securely with his teeth while it was revolved at great speed, and he also made a sensational lift of a huge iron bar, weighing 1,700 pounds. Other features embraced Princess Thona, Harry Allen, Nelson, the juggler, and Topsy turns. Two great moving shows were given by "The Minstrel Maids," Raymond and Merrill, in monologues; Holmes and Hood, in a dancing turn, and the Meadows Minstrel Company, in "The Senator."

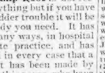
DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in curing lame back, uric acid, catarrh of the bladder and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work and in private practice, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root, and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.



Local Hits at Variety Houses

Orpheum Theatre

The lover of vaudeville who is not pleased with the bill at the Orpheum this week would be hard to please. All the acts are good, and there is great variety. Voita, "the electric marvel," is a young man who seems to have perfect conductors for the mysterious force which makes trolley wheels go round and withstands with unruffled a voltage which appears intense enough to melt iron. To see a man light the gas with the tip of his tongue is indeed a novelty. Voita does it. William A. Dillon sang several of his thousand songs and then delivered a monologue. He has a fresh voice, and the art of doing all he does well. Amazing every moment and quite original, he scored all the time with the audience. Paul La Croix, seen at this house for the first time, does some juggling very deftly and quite out of the ordinary. He is worth while, all right. Edwards Davis and company played "The Unmasking," very well. It is a two-scene tragedy, and the play has a good deal of tragic force. Others who entertained were Montgomery and Moore, Edward Clark and his Merry Widows, Quinlan and Mack, and Wills and Hassan. The latter's shooting astonishing strength and perfection of poise as upside letters. Of course, the kinetograph pictures pleased.

Keith's Theatre

Burr McIntosh, actor-photographer-lecturer, makes his vaudeville debut in Boston this week at the head of a very strong bill at Keith's. Mr. McIntosh has a tavern to-five-minute display of pictures taken in his Far East trip and a lecture that is characteristically interesting. His number last evening was enlivened a bit when one or two anti-imperialists took issue with him from the audience on the desirability of the United States Senate "forcing" which is lasting the development of the Philippines. The "antis," however, were in the minority. Rodolphus Dale, a twenty-minute opera by Jesse L. Lasky, is loaded with good music and snappy lines. It may well be called an "all star" production, for the two revivals of old and old in a way that puts many heavier productions in the shade. The most prominent of the evening was accorded Christine La Barrange, the gifted singer whose remarkable life story is known to many Bostonians. It was her vaudeville debut, and it was an auspicious one. She sang three numbers, and revoked an enthusiasm that was not exceeded since last night, except when she rendered "Annie Laurie" as an encore. Walter C. Kelly, the "Virginia Judge," varied last week's monologue with a few new stories. His character portrayals of Southern folk were well given, and, just over from London, has one of the drollest acts ever put on a Boston stage. He is billed as a juggler, but he makes his bit with a line of jostive talk.

Howard Athenaeum

"Continuous laughter show" is the best description applicable to "Tom, Dick and Harry," presented by the stunning Avenue Girls' Company at the Old Howard yesterday. The musical numbers were of the brightest kind and the comedians, John Hanson, Dave Conroy and Joe Emerson, were a tandem of real funmakers. Another feature was the added act put on by the management and headed by Lore and Payne, premier comedy acrobats. Others on the bill were Marion and Deane, Scott and Whaley, Charles and Nellie King, Wood and Lawson, Humes and Lewis, Pauline Slosson, Beecher and Maye, Helene Francis and the Howardscope.

Tremont Theatre

It is worth double the price of admission just to hear Arthur Deming, the great vent ventriloquist ever seen here, at the Tremont. His work is clean-cut, natural and is so punctuated with bright bits of humorous repartee that if he were the only act on the bill he could draw a crowded house. Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Cowan, with two young people who can sing and dance, receive George M.'s "Running for Office" and with laughable effect. The Six Musical Cutty's, a family of remarkable musicians, are the other headliners, and they had to respond to a number of encores. There is nothing trashy about their act. Everything is artistic, and the three young women are unusually attractive. Feresto and his dogs do a clever acrobatic act, and Burton and Brooks revive their act, "The Idiot," which is one saved from commercialism by their interpolation of the "Smoke" song, full of local hits, especially on the coal graft case. The Three Yoscary's are good gymnasts, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Van, in blackface, and Captain Wood ward's trained seals complete the bill.

Columbia Theatre

Manager Gordon of the Kentucky Belles who has always given Boston the best of burlesque entertainments, surprised even the most blase playgoer at the Columbia last night by the superbly staged, thoroughly up-to-date and rollicking musical farce. Never did a burlesque entertainment keep so continually among the realms of a high class show as did "Mr. Wise from Broadway." Another big surprise came in the solo, which was as evenly balanced as it was strong. The Three Melvins, who played a recent date as a headline act in their vaudeville specialties, were seen in sensational work of head and hand balancing; Andy McLeod, "the hard of Erin," secured his humor triumphs as the doorkeeper of the Philippines. The "antis," however, were in the majority on the discussion of the United States Senate "forcing" which is lasting the development

The Way to Acquire Hypnotic Power and Personal Magnetism

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1907, by American Journal-Examiner

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

THE desire to possess power over others is one of the strongest traits springing from human selfishness and vanity. But this trait frequently brings great disaster upon the individual who gives it full vent.

Among the many vicious and immoral advertisements which appear in hundreds of reputable periodicals all over the world are the announcements of certain so-called "colleges" and "schools," where "hypnotism" and "personal power" are promised to those who send a certain sum of money for which they will receive the "mystic" instruction for "development."

It is needless to say that the majority of such advertisements proceed from fakes and charlatans, pure and simple. Their patrons prove the old adage of "The Fool and His Money." Others are fathered by men who have gained a little knowledge of the power which lies in concentration, and are putting it to an evil purpose. To have any dealings with such men is like having a leper for a bedfellow.

School of Robbery

THE professional, conscious hypnotist, is a "thief in the night" of his fellow mortal senseless and robs him of his greatest possession; his will power.

To advertise the teaching of hypnotism is to advertise a school of robbery and murder.

To heal a man by hypnotism is to take away a physical pain for a time and to rob him of his individual will forever.

Hypnotism is not easily taught; and those who claim to teach it should be put under bonds to keep the peace and fined as "suspicious men" besides.

Personal magnetism and personal power can be developed by any man who is willing to train himself in the conservation of his energies, and who keeps his mind free from frittering away its vital forces on a thousand and one trivial subjects every hour of the day.

To learn how to be calm, and quiet, and still, to learn how to think consecutively for even ten minutes on one topic, to acquire the habit of thinking only helpful and strengthening thoughts, and of dismissing all jealous, bitter, gloomy and revengeful impulses as soon as they appear in the mind, these are all methods which lead to "personal power" and "magnetism."

The Right Way

MAGNETISM is a word often used but little understood. Yet no one can deny the peculiar quality possessed by certain people whose silent presence in a room seems to produce exhilaration and stimulation for others.

We are instinctively drawn to such people, and we feel better fitted to cope with our own affairs in life after meeting them. We do not know that they have said anything in particular to us, but we do know that they have been "magnetic."

Another man will sit in the room and say and do nothing unlike the magnetic person, but he will leave us weak, dispirited and nervous.

The difference lies in the fact that the magnetic man has sent his thoughts of good will and personal interest toward you, thereby setting up electric fan and causing a refreshing current. The other man has turned all his thoughts and desires upon himself and robbed the air of all its "ozone."

Love, good will, unselfishness, and concentration, these are the steps which will lead you to a knowledge of "magnetism" and "personal power."

Expert Advice on Health and Beauty

BY THE PROFESSOR

FOR A DRY SCALP

DEAR PROFESSOR:

I have a very dry scalp and also have dandruff that sticks to my head. When I comb my hair the scales fall and leaves a kind of scab. My hair is falling very rapidly and I would be thankful for relief from these troubles. A WORRIED GIRL.

ANOINT the scalp every night with a very little red vaseline, rubbing well into the scalp by a gentle massage. Once a month give it a cool oil bath and shampoo the next morning. Don't wash the hair too much, as that takes all the natural oil out of it. It may be that your blood is in bad condition and in that case any amount of external applications might be used ineffectually. The hair shows any lack of nutriment in the body or any deranged functions very readily.

HOW TO USE POWDER

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Is bay rum good for the face? If so, how often should it be used? Also how often should it be used for the face? Kindly tell me how to use cream and powder. D. D. B.

USE witch hazel on the face instead of bay rum, and use alcohol once a week on the hands to cleanse the pores instead of bay rum. Anoint your face well with a good cream and massage it in well with a little rotary movement. Wipe off well with a soft cheesecloth towel, and if you find difficulty in getting all the cream off without rubbing too hard wet the cloth in alcohol. Then put on the powder evenly and you will find a soft, velvety surface.

VIBRATORY MASSAGE

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Do you please tell me if vibratory massage is good for the scalp? I think that mine needs some stimulation, and I have been told that this remedy is good. S.

VIBRATORY massage is excellent for the scalp. It is an excellent stimulant for the scalp is properly given, as it greatly increases the circulation. Have it given, however, by an operator who understands her business.

CUCUMBER JUICE

DEAR PROFESSOR:

Please give me instructions for the fattening of the hands and arms; also tell me how to obtain the juice of cucumbers. MRS. H. W.

LANOLINE is the greatest fattener, but if your skin has a tendency to produce hair, use cocoa butter and olive oil for massaging the hands and arms. Lanoline should be used the same time to keep them white, as the constant use of olive oil has a tendency to make the skin yellow. Boil the sliced cucumbers in a little water until they are soft; ripe ones give more juice than green ones; strain through a cloth and you have the cucumber juice for use. If you want to preserve it, mix it with the same quantity of alcohol.

CANNED TOMATOES

PEEL the tomatoes by placing them in a pan and pouring boiling water over them and allowing them to stand two minutes. Put them in a kettle with a little water, just enough to cover. Have your cans boiling in a pan, and when the tomatoes begin to soften fill the cans and use the water in which tomatoes were cooked to fill the cans at once.

CUCUMBER PICKLES

HERE is the recipe for pickling small green cucumbers, asked for in Sunday's AMERICAN, September 22: Cucumbers four or five inches long should be cut into four or five pieces, smaller ones in half, or very small cucumbers may be used whole. Make bring; to one quart of water add three tablespoons of salt, the pepped cucumber to remain in this over night. Drain off in the morning, and to every layer of cucumbers add two tablespoons of mustard seed and some chipped ice.

Household and Health Hints

SAVE CHERRY SYRUP

TF one cans a quart jar of canned cherries for pie one usually strains off all the juice. This juice will make a delightfully refreshing drink by adding a quart of water, three tablespoons of sugar and some chipped ice.

RUGS FROM BEDSPREADS

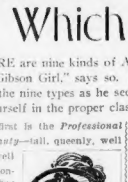
IF old bedspreads were colored blue, cut in strips and woven, as for rag carpet, into rugs, one four by six feet and two others of less dimensions. A white fringe finished the ends, and the velvety surface of the rugs when woven gave them an oriental appearance.

Nine Kinds of American Girls

THIS IS THE NEW CLASSIFICATION OF ARTIST CHARLES DANA GIBSON

In Which Class Do You Fit?

THERE are nine kinds of American girls. Charles Dana Gibson, the famous master-artist of the "Gibson Girl," says so. Here are given his classifications, together with Palenske's illustrations of the nine types as he sees them from Mr. Gibson's description. Study them well and try to place yourself in the proper class.



Beauty

"THE first is the Professional Beauty—tall, queenly, well built and well dressed, conscious of her personal charms. She is usually a daughter of rich parents, leads a sort of official life, is always on parade, and always in full uniform.

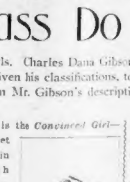
"My second type is the Boy Girl—wears a short skirt everywhere and a mannish cap and slicked soles. She is a jolly good fellow. Her frocks are tailor-made, she plays billiards, and would rather have the excitement of being nearly killed in a runaway in the park than to have you make love to her.

Boy Girl

"My third is the Sentimental Girl—a willowy creature, with dreamy eyes, romantic temperament, making each man understand that she adores him, and then the moment she feels he is taking her seriously discovers she doesn't love him at all, and never did.

Sentimental

"My fourth is The Flirt—all eyes; eyes always in action, keeping half a dozen men in love with her and the jealous of her at the same time.



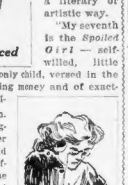
Flirt

"My fifth is the Convinced Girl—who has a set purpose in life, which may be a religious or a charitable task, or merely the collection of postage stamps.

"My sixth is the Ambitious Girl—who aspires to high ideals, and who seeks to attain that ideal by making her entire life subservient to it. This type leaves the country, crowds into big cities, where you can recognize her either among those socially ambitious or among those ambitious in a literary or artistic way.

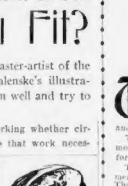
Convinced

"My seventh is the Spoiled Girl—self-willed, little self-control, only child, versed in the art of spending money and of exacting the gallantry of men. She is recognized by her selfishness and by her indifference to the labor entailed in granting her whims, by father or husband.



Ambitious

"My eighth is the Independent Girl—a business-like young woman, who earns her own way as a bread-winner, working whether circumstances make that work necessary or not. She is athletic, belongs to clubs, carries a latch key and always demands her rights.



Spoiled

"My ninth and last type is the Well-Balanced Girl—the one whom men like best to marry. She is a happy combination of all the other types in my congress of American girls."

Independent

Have you seen these nine types? Do you recognize any of your friends among them?

Study yourself for a few minutes, carefully and thoughtfully, and then try to place YOURSELF in your proper category. Probably no one man has done so much as C. D. Gibson in the artistic study of the American girl.

Well Balanced

Is Gibson right? Look about and then form your own opinion.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued

DICK had seen Elizabeth angry before, too, never quite like this. Slowly within him his own anger was mounting. What right, he thought, had she to take him thus to task—him, a man? He drew himself up, his face suddenly lost its pallor and a flush of scarlet mottled it. Strangely, in that same instant, Elizabeth's face became very white.

"Here," he said, speaking in a heavy voice, "I don't want any more of this from you!"

For an instant there was something menacing in his manner, and then he walked away and left her.

Elizabeth stood for a moment, trembling violently. He had gone into the dining room; he was talking with his mother in low tones. Elizabeth went up stairs to her room and closed the door, and then a great wave of moral sickness swept over her.

She sat down, trying to compose herself, trying to still her nerves. The whole swift scene with her brother flashed before her in all its squalor.

Had she acted well or rightly? Was her anger what is called righteous indignation?

She was sure that she had acted for the best, for her father in the first place, and for Dick more than all, but it was suddenly revealed to her that she had failed; she had not touched his heart at all; she had expended all her force, and it was utterly lost; she had failed—failed. This woeful conviction of her brain, flattened into her in all its squalor.

CHAPTER XIV.

RICHIE KOERNER and Spud Healy and the others of the gang lay in prison for a week; each morning they were taken with other prisoners to the bull-pen, and there they would stand—for an hour, two hours, three hours—and look through a heavy wire screen at officers, lawyers, court attaches, witnesses and prosecutors who passed and repassed and looked at them as caged animals, some curiously, some in hatred and contempt, some with fear, now and then one with pity.

Arraigned!

The session would end, they would be taken downstairs—the police were not yet ready. But finally one Saturday morning they were taken into the courtroom and arraigned.

Bostwick, the Judge, heard a part of the evidence; it was nearly noon, and court never sat on Saturday afternoons. Bostwick and the prosecutor both were very anxious to get away for their half-holiday.

The session had been long and trying; the morning was sultry, a Summer day had fallen unexpectedly in the midst of the Spring. Bostwick was uncomfortable in his heavy clothes. He hurried the hearing and sent them all to the workhouse for thirty days and had them the costs.

Marriott had resined the hopelessness of the case from the first; even he was glad the hearing was over; glad to have Archie off his mind.

The little trial was but a trivial incident in the life of the city. Bostwick and the prosecutor, to whom it was but a part of the day's work, forgot it in the rest of ordering a luncheon; the police forgot it, excepting Kouka, who boasted to the reporters and felt important for a day.

Frisby, a little lawyer with a catarrhal voice, thought of it long enough to be thankful for the fee in advance from the mother of the boy he had defended, and then dismissed it and made her go hungry over Sunday.

Jack, the Jew, in the shadow of the beautiful spire of St. Francis, there were those basilic incantations, those mumbling of beads and prayers to the Virgin.

Reporters made room for their brief newspapers, writing in the flippant spirit with which they had been taught to treat the daily tragedies of the police court, and the people scanned the paragraphs of life passed by on the other side; the crowds of the city swarmed and swarmed, Sunday dawned with the church bells ringing peacefully.

News from Jerry.

The Koerner family had the news that evening from Jerry Crowley, the policeman who had recently been assigned to that beat, his predecessor, Miller, having been suspended for drunkenness.

Jerry had had a long beating of it ever since he came on the beat. The vicinity was deep land and he was Irish, and swarming, poised him daily with sneers and jibes and insults—now and then with stones and clubs. Sometimes the gang of Kelly and the gang at Nussbaum's; the gang made by Richie Koerner. Yet Crowley was a kindly Irishman, with many a jest and a good word for the boys on the street.

Almost any person he arrested could get Crowley to let him go by begging hard enough. On the warm evenings Koerner and Jerry, the Irish cop and Crowley, coming by, would stop for a dish of gossip.

"Oh, some now, Mr. Koerner," he said that Saturday night, after he had crudely told the old German of his son's fate, "I wouldn't take that hard; shuts and maybe it's good 'twill be doin' the lad an him good; 'tis the way he does."

Crowley was also interrupted in his comforting by a racket at the corner—the warm night sights were bringing the gang out, and he went away to wage his hopeless fight, and Koerner had gone indoors.

Gusta shared her father's humiliation and grief and resented the awful blot of imprisonment. She felt that she should visit Richie and Spud Healy, but it was a whole week before she could get away, and then in a fashionable afternoon she went out to the workhouse.

The prison buildings were surrounded by a high fence, ugly in its dull gray paint, and she went to the warden's quarters where the superintendent lived with a great many of the prisoners as trusty had made flowerbeds to please the superintendent's wife. In the office an old clerk, in a long, black coat, received Gusta solemnly.

He was chiding, from the habit of many years, on the high stool at the desk where he worked; ordinarily he crouched over his books in the fear that political changes would take his job from him; now a boy, any paper, which the superintendent and his family had read and discarded, replaced the and records, but he bent over this none the less timidly.

Easy to Be a Good Husband, but Hard to Be a Good Wife

By Dorothy Dix

THE difference between being a good wife and a good husband is the difference between a ballad and grand opera with a motif, overture, full orchestral movement, andante, pianissimo and other frills.

The one is very simple. The other is the most complicated and contradictory performance on earth.

To be a good husband a man needs to be merely kind, faithful and a good provider. What else a wife will need to supplies the humble feminine demand.

Of course, there are a few other qualities, such as sympathy, comprehension and companionship, that a woman would like to have thrown in as good measure if she could obtain, but she doesn't require them.

She has seen such evil fates befall so many of her friends that if she gets a husband who doesn't bruise her susceptibilities a dozen times a day with rough words, or keep her aggravated with jealousy, and who pays her bills without grumbling, she is down on her knees thanking God, fasting, for having sent her such a good husband.

The man, then, who desires to do his duty in the conjugal state of life to which he calls himself finds the road very plain and easy to travel. A few kind words, a compliment now and then, a kiss, a caress, a gown or an occasional bonnet, and the roving glances after other women, and his laurel crown as the model husband of the world is crowned with the Model Husband.

Woman's Lot

FAR different is the lot of the woman who wishes to be a good wife and realize the impossible ambition of every bride—to be all in all to her husband. There is no simple line of conduct she may follow, secure that if she pursue it she will please and be rewarded with his plaudits.

There is no certain ideal toward which she may shape her life, knowing that if she achieves it she will hold his affection secure.

On the contrary, as the years go by and she sees one failure after failure, one after truth begins to soak in on her with deadly cold insistence, and that is, that a wife's virtues are her undoing and that the better wife she is the less her husband will think of her and the worse husband he will be to her.

This is a hard saying, but millions of heart-broken and disillusioned women have to proven it.

Undoubtedly, if you ask a man what goes to make up a good wife, he will tell you that one of her chief qualities is the devotion that makes a woman ready to sacrifice herself to her husband, but it is a quality that is never solved in the abstract that is rewarded in the concrete.

Women will tell you that any one who cares to take note of the phenomenon that the devoted wife who bears all the cruelties and pinches and economizes to help her husband is the one who is allowed to do it without any note ever being taken of it, while the woman who is a spendthrift and who demands everything for herself is credited, and considered, and petted and adored.

If the ghost of the first wives who have worked themselves into the grave trying to be "good wives" to men who never even rewarded their efforts with a pat of approval are permitted to revisit the earth and see the pampered second wives upon whom their husbands are dancing attendance, there must be lively doings in the spirit world.

Another curious problem is also presented here—man's contradictory theory and practice.

The universal mental picture in a man's eye of a good wife is that of a woman whose horizon is bounded by the four walls of her home, and who is forever cutting bread and butter and singing babies to sleep.

It is easy enough for a woman to live up to the domestic standard, but when she does, what happens?

She finds that her husband's taste runs to cambric tea and bread and butter, that the nursery doesn't appeal to him as a place to spend a social evening and dinner evening, and that only too often he has wasted all the time he has to spare on one of a lady who looks at babies through her eyeglasses, but is up in the last word on transcendental philosophy.

Nailed to Hearth

It is an undeniable and discouraging fact that the woman who tries to live up to her husband's blue china in the home generally draws none of the dividends to which she is entitled. There are many social, and, sometimes financial, ways by their own hearthstones, and they mostly hold down the home alone.

Here, too, the wife who is conscientiously trying to be a good wife, and do her full duty by her husband, runs plump into the rock on which the stress sit combining their peroxide pompadours and singing a jolly to married men about coming along and being flattered and amused.

A good woman who loves a man, who is anxious for him to make the most of himself and succeed, is found at times to cut her husband's attention to his faults, and to at least try to restrain him when she sees him doing reckless and foolish things.

The other woman, who cares nothing for him but for the money and respect he earns, she can get out of him, feels no such responsibility. She doesn't care how he earns it, or how he gets. She doesn't care whether he spends more than he can afford or not. She doesn't care how big a fool he makes of himself.

The wife does. His shame to her shame. His extravagance makes a big hole out of her children's mouths. His imprudence and folly must be followed to do it without any note ever being taken of it, while the woman who is a spendthrift and who demands everything for herself is credited, and considered, and petted and adored.

Why Men Get Tired

It is because a wife stands for duty in a man's life that men tire of their wives and are eager to get away from them. It becomes the whim of what one must do instead of what one wants to do. There are the roast beef instead of the cake, the office stool instead of the free prairie.

They epitomize the sordid cares, the dull round of monotonous toil, the butcher bill and gas bill, and time explains the morning rise can why marriage is so often a failure, and why a man will often be niggardly to his family and pay their necessities with grudging and grumbling, and then joyously throw away his money on the first pretty face he sees in an hour, is nothing but loathing and disgust.

Take the case of the bachelor parties in men that makes being a good wife such a hard job. He will not know a woman even when she undertakes it which tack to take. She will be one thing to her husband, and she is pretty sure to soon quit firing his fancy she disenchants him by not coming up to the line.

And there she is, and nobody is capable of offering her a word of advice, for no two husbands themselves differ as one star differeth from another in glory.

ADVICE TO THE LOVELORN

By Beatrice Fairfax

A FOOLISH NOTION

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of only twenty-four years of age and have been employed in a department store here for a year, and I am very much in love with the superintendent of my department, who is a man of forty years and married. He treats me very nice and gives me many favors, and every day my love for him increases more, but as he is married I don't know what to do.

MY dear, put this foolish notion out of your head at once. The man is much older than you and only wants to pay you attentions out of a spirit of kindness. He

CHAPTER II.

"You Of meant to say you travelled all the way from Nome with no more luggage than that satchel?" I demanded.

"Yes, sir," she replied, flushing quickly; "I had no time to gather my things."

Here we were joined by my sister.

"Meltesia," I began, "this is Miss Knowles of Alaska. Take care of her."

"Please let me tell you how I came to come to Boston," interrupted our strange guest; "I see you don't know why I am here any more than I do."

"It would not be a bad idea," my sister observed coolly. The strange young woman after a moment's thought, began:

"I should tell you something about myself, first? Shouldn't I?"

"It would seem proper," said my sister.

"I am the daughter of Arthur Knowles," she declared, and, pausing, looked from one to the other of us. "You don't know him?"

I shook my head.

"He was originally from Boston," she continued; "but for years he and I—my mother died early—used to ramble over the West prospecting on grub stakes. We went to Alaska in the first rush. Dad found a lot of good locations and made a lot of money, but we kept right on prospecting around. Finally, last Spring, I just told him I had to have some kind of an education, for I was getting to be an awful big girl.

Indian Brought News.

"So he put me in a boarding school and went away up north with a party and a dog team last Spring. I got used to him going away like that and I didn't mind it until the Summer was over and he didn't come back. My money ran out, too, and I didn't know where he had his pile banked. Just as the weather closed in this Fall I got word of him from an Indian that struck town, coming in for the Winter. He said father had hit it rich and didn't want anyone to know anything about it, so he intended to shack down alongside of it until Spring. The Indian brought me a check from dad, and I paid him for his trouble and he went away. About a week after, the Indian got into a fight with some men and was killed, so I had no one to send to dad if I wanted to." She paused and considered for a moment before continuing.

"I wanted to get everything straight just as it happened," she explained; "I think it was about a month after that I let of us girls, going back to the school after a night at the theatre, ran into a drunken gang. We ran past them all but as someone in the crowd started to shoot. They weren't shooting at us, but bullets began to fly and we ran.

"One of the men broke out of the crowd and ran toward us. The rest followed and began pegging away at him. That brought every shot toward us and we ran for our lives.

"I forgot all about it in a week, but it came back to me one day when, while I was buying some things in a store, a young lady tagged out beautifully in furs came up and gave me that envelope. I looked at it. I didn't know what I was to do with it, you know, for I didn't know where Boston was, and I asked her what she meant.

Planned to Kidnap Her.

"She said the crowd had been shooting at me that night I went to the theatre and that the Indian who had brought the message from my father had told about my father's strike, and a party was on the way out to 'jump' him. If they didn't succeed, she said, they planned to kidnap me and hold up father with an injunction so as to get all he had washed, and work the property while the thing was in the courts. If he fought the injunction they were going to threaten to kill me.

"I didn't know what to do," she concluded, "so I told my teacher. The faculty held a consultation and went to the chief of police about it. Of course everyone there was afraid of the information gang. I couldn't find the young woman who gave me the envelope, and as the story got around and caused so much talk the faculty thought best that I leave the school for a while. They advised me to go to a certain family. I was on my way there and my baggage had already been delivered when the young woman met me again and told me to deliver that letter at once and let my baggage go. So I did."

TWENTY WORDS A MINUTE

Trans-Atlantic wireless service will be a reality within three weeks according to Guglielmo Marconi, the father of the wireless telegraph system, who declares that all obstacles have at last been overcome.

The rates are already established and the messages will be flashed across the ocean at the rate of twenty words a minute for cents a word for ordinary messages, commercial messages, while a special rate of five cents a word has been fixed for press dispatches.

Mr. Marconi is now at Glace Bay, N. S., where he has been inspecting the wireless station. He is very much elated with the outlook but says that there will be no formal demonstration to celebrate the opening of the new service.

The messages sent from the station at Glace Bay will be received on the other side of the Atlantic at Clifden, Ireland, where Mr. Marconi said a new plant had been established, fitted out with the latest machinery, and much more powerful than the older station at Poldhu, Cornwall.

The Cornwall station, he said, will be utilized as a secondary plant. Connection with the wireless stations Mr. Marconi stated that the government lines in Great Britain would handle the messages over land transmission, as the Marconi Company has a contract with the British Government to collect and distribute all its dispatches.

On this side of the ocean, he said, the company has a contract with the Canadian government, which he believes will place the government intercolonial Railway wires at its disposal, while the Canadian Pacific and Western Union companies both have their lines connected with the Glace Bay station, and Mr. Marconi hopes to do business with them.

During the next two or three weeks final tests will be made, and then the stations on both sides of the Atlantic will be thrown open to the public for the regular transmission of commercial wireless messages.

TO WELCOME HARVARD MEN

With the opening of the academic year the St. Paul's Catholic Club of Harvard University will give a reception and welcome to Catholic freshmen and newcomers. The officers and directors, assisted by patronesses, will receive in the gallery of Phillips Brooks House to-morrow afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock.

The aim of the club is both social and religious, and in order to forward the former, this meeting has been arranged for the beginning of the college year. In this way Catholic members of the university come to know one another at once.

As the "welcome" is entirely informal, freshmen and newcomers are required to attend without awaiting the receipt of a written invitation. This meeting is under the forerunner of a later reception which is tendered the entire Catholic membership of the university in October.

The patronesses are: Mrs. J. Bapst Blake, Mrs. Arthur Astor Carey, Miss Emma Forbes Carey, Mrs. John Chipman, Jr., Miss Alice G. O'Gorman, Mrs. E. W. Perkins, Mrs. Edwin Sheafe and Mrs. Paul Thorndike.

TURKISH SPIES SEEK ARMENIAN

WORCESTER, Sept. 24.—Threatened by both the Turkish government and the Armenian Hunchakists, Henry Martin of No. 38 Dewey street is taking every precaution to protect himself against a secret assassin. Several days ago Martin confirmed his suspicions that he was under surveillance of spies employed by the Turkish government, which believed him to be a leader in the Armenian revolutionist movement, in this country. His anxiety was increased two days ago when he received a postal card from New York which said:

"Keep silence. Give out nothing to the American press. It is on pain of death."

Martin declares that the Armenian secret society is after him because after the Armenian massacres of Tarshinglian, the wealthy New York Armenian, he gave the papers accounts of the deeds of the Hunchakist. Martin says he once belonged to the Hunchakists himself, but left the society when it became violent.

SAID WIFE SMOKED AND WAS ABUSIVE

That Mary A. Grant of Salem smoked her husband's cigars and was abusive was the story told to Judge Sears of the First District Court of Salem during a hearing on Mrs. Grant's petition for support from her husband, David B. Grant. Two daughters testified against Mrs. Grant and said she was abusive. The court said if the facts were true Mrs. Grant should have been sent to an insane asylum, but ordered Grant to pay $4 a week toward her support.

Croker Wears Monocle and British Aristocrats Now Chase After Him

Richard Croker in a monocle! It is true; the word comes direct from London. Who would have believed such a thing possible in the days when the now British turfman and country gentleman was the iron-handed chief of Tammany Hall? Not only does Mr. Croker wear a monocle, but he has learned to do so without embarrassment and in the true English fashion. While the British aristocracy tried to snub Mr. Croker a few years ago, its members are running after him.

Anty Drudge Knows.

Mrs. Oldfogey—"I don't believe in new-fangled ideas. Old-fashioned ways are best. No Fels-Naptha soap for me!"

Anty Drudge—"Some day you will wake up. You'll grow tired of the old-fashioned way of washing with its long hours, washtub slavery and backache. Then you'll try the Fels-Naptha way. I know you will, because I've met just such prejudiced women before, and they always join the Fels-Naptha army some day."

It is a natural instinct to keep on thinking that one's own way is best. Which probably explains why there are still women enslaved by the old, hot, hard kind of washday.

But reason overcomes instinct. That is part of reason's business. And there are a million women who have gone over from the big range-fire, the overheated house, the steaming suds and smell, the scalded clothes and the hard-rubbing to—the Fels-Naptha cool, easy washday.

How is it with you? You have the testimony of the million. Better still, you have the chance any day, any hour, to test our claims for yourself.

A cake of Fels-Naptha, water just as it comes from the spigot or pump, and the directions printed on the red and green wrapper—and you are ready to wash or clean anything.

Will you make the trial?

TIGERS, FIGHTING FOR PENNANT, HERE TO-DAY

BATTING ORDER.

DETROIT.	BOSTON.

If the equinoctial storm will hold up to-day the Hub diamond fans hope to get a glimpse of those pesky Tigers, led by Hughey Jennings, who says his outfit is going to beat out Philadelphia for the final pennant honors.

The Naps got away last night without having to play that third and last game in the series, which belonged to the Pilgrims, as the Naps copped the other two, and they are now camping on the Highlanders' domain, intent on doing similar tricks to the Gothamites as were accomplished here. The White Sox will wrestle with the Athletics and endeavor to knock them off the top rung while the St. Louis Browns take a few falls out of the Senators in order to help sixth place away from the local tribe.

The game to-day means a lot to the Tigers if they can win and the Athletics lose to the White Sox. Then both teams will be on an even footing and all will depend on the series which comes later in the week, between the Tigers and the Quakers over in Shawtown.

TIGERS GOING FAST.

The Tigers are strong to the highest pitch just at present with the pennant almost within their grasp and any team has got to show remarkable diamond stuff to beat them out. Judging by the way the Pilgrims have slumped, they hardly appear in the same class, but the turn is likely to come at any instant and the Tigers may be the victims.

The leaders are setting a terrific pace in this greatest of pennant races and the second division teams, with the exception of St. Louis, have displayed symptoms of being left behind. Jennings is too old a hand at the game to overlook the possibilities in the Hub nine and has every reason for fearing some bumps while he stays here.

The return to real form is about due in the Pilgrims, and the home fans are confident that the Tigers will not fare so well as the Naps did.

The Tigers are using their veteran pitchers as much as possible in this eastern invasion and Wild Bill Donovan is being worked to the utmost. On him alone the Tigers depend to beat out the Athletics. He pitched against the Highlanders last Friday and therefore Eddie Siever or big Mullin are likely to get the job to-day.

Manager McGuire will have to depend on one of his pounders to do the catching and either Glaze or Pruiett will be the selection.

NAPS STILL CONFIDENT.

The Naps still figure they have a chance to win the pennant.

"The Cleveland team has finally recovered from its slump and I look for good results in the remaining games," said Manager Lajoie yesterday. "My pitchers are working fairly well and the rest of the team is in grand shape and ready to make a clean sweep in the games with New York and Washington this week.

"We are a little over thirty points behind the leaders, and with half good luck we should cut that lead down in the remaining two weeks of the campaign.

"With six Providence players due to report to-morrow, the Boston Americans will be strengthened, and the Detroit team is apt to experience a little tough sledding during its stay in Boston.

Joe Harris and Ed Barry, the star twirlers of the Grays, are in top form and can be depended on to stop the Tigers in at least one of the games here.

Bob Peterson will take Criger's place behind the bat, and McConnell, the star clever second sacker, and Lord, the third baseman, will be given a day to the infield, while Chadbourne may be used in the outfield.

Donovan, the Tigers' Remarkable Winning Pitcher

Here is a picture of "Wild Bill" Donovan of the Detroits, who has the best pitching record in the country this season, and in fact one of the most astounding string of victories to his credit in the history of baseball, considering the even strength of the teams in the American League. Donovan has won twenty-four games and only lost four this season. He may pitch against the Pilgrims to-day.

CINCINNATI, Sept. 24.—Pat Flaherty, the crack southpaw, will probably face the Reds this afternoon, while Andy Coakley, the former Holy Cross star, will probably pitch against the Doves.

The Bostons are confident that they will turn the tables this time on the locals, and partially atone for the long string of defeats the home team have against them.

In the game yesterday, the Cincinnatis outslugged the Bostons and won, 11 to 6.

Barbeiich, the Boston recruit from the New England league was batted out of the box, Bootes relieving him, while Weimer was also hard hit, but remained on the mound until the end of the game.

SMART MEETS M'LEOD ON MAT

Jim Smart, the English heavyweight wrestler, whose past performances in this city have won him the good will of the wrestling fraternity, will be Dan McLeod's opponent in the big wrestling tourney at the Columbia Theatre to-night. The amateur wrestlers, and there seem to be plentiful in this vicinity, are sending in their names for the preliminaries in pretty thorough fashion, and two pair will go on tonight while McLeod and Smart are resting between the falls.

JACK JOHNSON WILL KEEP ON TRACK OF TOMMY BURNS

Tommy Burns, the alleged heavyweight champion, is a lucky man. When Jack Johnson, the big colored fighter, who has forced all the gladiators of the ring to draw the color line, met the BOSTON AMERICAN that Tommy Burns was to be at the ringside of the Gans-Memsic fight on Friday night in Los Angeles he immediately hied himself to the nearest railroad office to look up trains for the leading city in Southern California.

Unfortunately for the big fighting dark skin and fortunately for the peaceful part of the Australian lemon, there was no train connection with the battle ground and Jack the ringside in time to cause a little disturbance.

"That's too bad," said Lil Arthur, who figured to meet Jeffries in the battle at Los Angeles by Friday night, and missed it by just a day. "I wanted to get there and challenge Burns from the ring, pass over my $5,000 forfeit to the referee and leave it to the crowd to decide whether Burns should meet me. It's a fine opportunity lost, as Burns would have to accept my challenge or else quit the ring for good.

"I won't rest till I show Mr. Burns up," said Jack.

"I don't intend that he shall get away from me, and I am willing to let the public decide whether Burns is to be allowed to go on claiming the heavyweight title, without meeting me and duffing his forfeit.

"Burns has no excuse not to meet me, as I am here to-day with my money ready to cover for winner to take all of the wood.

"I was never so sincere before in my life as I am in this matter, and stands ready to put up any size forfeit when Burns says the word."

JAWN O'BRIEN WOULD BOX TOMMY BURNS FOR CHARITY

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Philadelphia Jack O'Brien has come out with an offer that will make a few of the boxers sit up and wag their ears a bit. He says that he could beat Tommy Burns any time he ever faced him, and to prove that his intentions were of the best offered to fight the Canadian from six to twenty rounds, providing the latter would agree if he lost to give the entire proceeds to charity. If O'Brien loses he will let Burns have all the money. He says that both he and Burns fooled the people of Los Angeles with a prearranged affair, and he now felt that it would be only right to come out and fight for charity and show the people which is the better man.

"I will let the Evening Journal name the charity to which the money goes," said Jack, "and the sooner Burns comes through the better I will like it.

"I also wish to state," said Mr. O'Brien, "that if Jim Jeffries will agree to fight me for six rounds I will box him anywhere but in the West, and if I fail to stay six rounds with him he can have all the money. You can state that if I do stay the six rounds I will put that my money will go to charity. I don't want a cent of it.

"I have won lots of money by boxing spectacular exhibitions, and now, if I am called, will take on either Burns or Jeffries and I have stated, and have the money go to charity. This talk about Jeffries being such a great knocker-out is all bosh, and I'll promise you that he'll get the worst peppering he ever received if he agrees to last the full six rounds.

"I would only weigh 165 pounds, while Jeff would tip the beam at 250, but at that I don't see where he would have a chance of getting me. If Jim Corbett could pound him for twenty-three rounds, certainly a young fellow like myself, with my cleverness, could get him hopping faster to six rounds. Yes, it goes, every word I say, and if either of these fellows makes the call I'll be down at the Evening Journal office with a forfeit the very next day."

RUSSELL WILL BATTLE WITH BRIGGS TONIGHT

Two sturdy men will clash to-night at the Winnisimmet Athletic Club of Chelsea, when "Fuk" Russell meets Jimmy Briggs in a ten-round go carnival. It is very seldom that a pair of boxers shape up so near alike as these two. The fans will have to keep their eyes well peeled during the bout to determine which is which.

Briggs has been doing some great stunts in his training for to-night's go, and the man from Philadelphia will find him as good as he ever was.

Briggs when right is second to no man in the East at his weight. He has faced the best of them during the past three years and his defeat of Joe Dedrick, when the latter was coming along at a fast clip, a year ago, shows that he is still the premier light-weight of New England, notwithstanding the views of some over-enthusiastic ones.

The semi-final to-night will be between Henry Myers and Young Murray of Lynn. The boy from the Shoe City is going to make a rough, tough game out for one of the outcome. There will be one other six-round smoke eraser between two local men.

GRIM GOT ANOTHER BEATING.

NEW YORK, Sept. 24.—Joe Grim retained his title of "the human punching bag" at the stag of the Dry Dock A. C. against Jim Barry of Chicago and was punched and banged all over the ring, but he was on his feet with his hands up when the bell ended the fight.

Notes of the Harness Horses

The Gentlemen's Driving Club of Boston ended their matinees at Readville a month earlier than scheduled, then the second one was made on June 29th. Just how much owning the condition of the track had to do with the change in date will be a certain bad weather will have to be done to bustle up those members in taking an interest who have in the past occupied a back seat.

It is too bad that the three-year-old Union from A. H. Perley, was not entered in some of the futurities for 2:30 trotters, for 2:25 pacers or 2:12 pacers, as he would have been a strong factor and the best specials pointed out for the big stakes.

E. O. O'Neil would like a race with Joseph Scordelone over the Franklin Field Speedway, matching his Fitzgerald against Genevieve, but his confidence has been a long way the best of such a match, as it was simply play for him to step the mile in 31 seconds last Saturday.

Lou McDonald is riding among the top-notchers this year, which is quite a difference from last season, when the Hoodoo Bird had him for fair.

To-date he has marked this year Kruger, 2:04, Hidalgo, 2:04½, Lassie Bellona, 2:08½, Belle Bird, 2:09¼, Douglas Boy, 2:12¼, and Gladys, 2:09¾.

Frank Hall of the Lagrange House is quite busy these days over a few foal that his mare Bolgard, 2:16¼, has had for him, and he likes the lineup so well that he intends breeding the mare back for the same sire. He has one for sale either outright or to get a share of the big money that they will bring later on.

Abe Johnson is working some youngsters at the Fairfield Park Stock Farm, Derby, Conn., and fast for the little handling they have received.

From indications it looks like Trainer Lon McDonald, and the young mare, Lucky Bolton, 2:04¾, owned by Ralph R. Williams of Boston, are going to be a big factor in a match race that will lead to the National Trotting Association taking action at its meeting in December. The fast Goshen got on to the fact that the timers at Readville caught her in 2:08¾, and she was then sent to Lexington, Ky., where Lon McDonald requested them to show what they could start in the 2:05 list at Columbus, and there on that McDonald already is reaping the timers.

SPORTING NEWS SUMMARY.

FOOTBALL.

NEW HAVEN, SEPT. 24.—Although the nine-cornered tussle between Yale and Harvard for football supremacy will grow steadily of light work in the gymnasium and on the field, the Blue is showing up so well that some of the veterans are going to have trouble in holding down places on the eleven.

ITHACA, SEPT. 24.—Waiter, the monster full-back, and Benton, right tackle, who, it was stated, would not return to college, are back in an appearance yesterday and practiced with the squad today. Both men declare that they will be a power of strength to the team. Bills and, last year's captain, will not return to the business, as is thought, and will not be in the game this season. Bills has been declared to be certified to the faculty and his name for the Cornell eleven will work the forward pass better this season than any one of the big five.

BROWN WORSTEDS

Has left tailors, jobbers and woolen manufacturers utterly unable to meet the wants of the people for these favorite colorings. If your complexion will let you wear Brown, see my range and variety.

Beyond question, I am carrying a greater stock than any tailor on the continent; beyond doubt, I am the only tailor in Boston who can take orders for 300 Brown Suitings and guarantee delivery; beyond dispute, I can profitably sell clothing for what it costs other tailors to produce it.

AUTOISTS MEET ROAD BUILDERS AT SPRINGFIELD

By J. C. KERRISON.

SPRINGFIELD, Sept. 24.—The Springfield Automobile Club is now playing the part of host to many of the leading road builders, statesmen and motorists, not only of New England, but of the entire country. These distinguished individuals came here at the invitation of the local organization for the purpose of holding conference and deciding as far as possible the best plans to secure better results in road construction and maintenance of roads, and also in the matter of securing more favorable legislation in both the national and State salons.

This morning's session was rather late in convening, but once it was under way things progressed most rapidly and evenly, the attendance of the meeting being devoted to the question of good roads and the establishment of trunk roads.

Among those who will take part in this discussion are Dr. A. R. Pechman, deputy director of the division of roads in the department of agriculture; W. H. Hotchkiss of Buffalo, president of the A. A. A.; Robert P. Hooper, chairman of the A. A. A. committee on good roads; Paul D. Sergeant of Maine, J. H. Edwards of Rhode Island, John H. McDonald of Connecticut, and Joseph W. Hunter of Philadelphia, highway commissioners in their States. Mr. Hunter will be accompanied by his deputy, A. L. Bremen. It is expected that the Massachusetts highway commissioners will take part, although all may not be on hand the first day.

This afternoon the subject of legislation will come up, and one comparatively new idea will be presented by authorities, the idea of having federal registration of automobiles.

Almost all of the clubs in New England have representatives at this meeting, while the A. A. A. is represented by its president, first vice-president, secretary and two members of the board of directors.

This meeting bids fair to be one of the most beneficial that has been held in this State for years, and its character can well be copied by those motorists and local organizations really interested in the welfare and advancement of the industry and the pastime, if motoring can be termed a pastime

What Are You Going to Do About It?

The Question Is Not New but the Answer Ought to Be About the Same

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner

When Bill Tweed, who had stolen $6,000,000 from the city of New York, was arrested for wholesale plundering, he looked up at the deferential sheriff, who had come to announce that a warrant was out, and asked with sneering smile, "What are you going to do about it?"

That question has been asked many times since by men who have misrepresented the people in public office. Sometimes they have been rapacious grafters, sometimes merely tools of predatory corporations.

But in the end the people have always done something. In Tweed's case they forced his prosecution and had the satisfaction of seeing him go to prison.

Men who have not been convicted of accepting bribes or of looting, but who have been guilty of betraying the interests of the people, seem to think they can keep on holding public office as long as they have a railroad or some other big public service corporation to help them at campaign times to break through their own records.

Perhaps "Bill" Turtle of Pittsfield thought he could keep in the House, or go to the Senate, as long as he stood well with corporations and that they, and not the people, had his political future in their keeping.

But he was mistaken. What the people were going to do about it was so plainly written in public sentiment in the Berkshires that the Republican City Committee refused to sanction his name being put on the ballot as the party candidate. The committee said he would be defeated by the voters if he went to the polls as a candidate.

What happened to Turtle ought to interest Speaker Cole, who helped Turtle sidetrack the labor bills in recent Legislatures.

Cole, like his legislative partner, Turtle, has a public service record that makes the people eager to inter him in the political grave he has dug by his own acts.

The Editor and the Advertiser

Mr. Borsodi Thinks the Editor Doesn't Do His Duty—Perhaps He Doesn't

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner

William Borsodi is going to start a "newspaper trades paper." It is to be "The Advertisers' Weekly." It will point out to advertisers things they ought to know, and it will tell the editors about the things that they ought to do and do not do.

Without waiting for his advertisers' newspaper to appear, Mr. Borsodi writes to this newspaper to say that editors don't take interest enough in advertisers or their welfare.

Mr. Borsodi says that the advertising income of newspapers is thirty-four million dollars greater than the income from subscriptions, and he argues from this "that the editors get their pay actually, though not confessedly, from the advertising income of the papers."

Mr. Borsodi says that editors do not realize their duty. This is his idea: "Few editors realize their responsibility for and their obligation toward the advertiser."

Mr. Borsodi asks for an editorial on this subject.

The attitude of a newspaper toward the advertiser should be based upon fairness and appreciation, rather than upon any actual cash advertising figures. The modern newspaper is made possible by the enterprise and energy of advertisers.

On the other hand, the success of many able business men is made possible only by the extraordinary publicity that a great newspaper can give to them. The business man makes it possible to give to the people for one cent a newspaper that actually costs far more than that. And that newspaper in return enables the advertiser, for a very small outlay, to say what he has to say, and offer his merchandise to millions of human beings in one day.

It is the duty of the editor to promote the interests of advertisers and all business men, because they in their turn develop the prosperity and well-being of the country, THROUGH DISTRIBUTION.

The question is not whether the advertiser makes a living for the editor or the editor a living for the advertiser. The fact is that editor and advertiser alike live upon the patronage OF THE READER. The ordinary man who reads the paper is the REAL power. Without him the editor would have no advertiser, and without him the advertisers would make no money. The editor and the advertiser alike should work with the reader—the general public—exclusively in mind. If the editor is absolutely conscientious in his attitude toward the public, if he remembers that he is the trusted journalistic advocate of the man who buys his newspaper, if he realizes that he is in honor bound to protect the interests of the millions to whom he owes his success, HE WILL DO HIS BEST WORK FOR HIS ADVERTISER IN DEPENDING HIS READING PUBLIC.

What the advertiser wants is not necessarily a newspaper that agrees with him individually in everything or in anything, but a newspaper that takes what he has to say and puts it before the greatest possible number of people, giving him a chance to build up his enterprise if he can.

As the editor benefits the advertiser by serving the public, so the advertiser helps the newspaper when his advertisements promote the interests of the public.

When a man of real ability, able to give the public the benefit of his superior quality or his cheaper prices, uses a newspaper as his medium for addressing the public, he benefits all the readers of that newspaper, and therefore he benefits the newspaper itself.

The editor should always remember that advertisers make it possible to distribute expensive newspapers below cost, and the editor should have a feeling of gratitude and appreciation toward all advertisers, because they enable him to conduct his enterprise on a great and useful scale.

But he serves the advertiser best when his mind is entirely upon the masses of the people, upon the hundreds of thousands, the millions, that he has never seen and never will see—THE MEN AND WOMEN WHO TRUST IN HIM AND IN HIS DETERMINATION TO PROTECT THEIR INTERESTS.

Mr. Borsodi points out that there are twenty-three thousand newspapers published in the United States—a good many. If the editors of all those newspapers would put their minds entirely on something of use to their readers, looking after THEIR interests, fighting those that gouge them through Trusts, or betray them in office, and if the advertisers in all of their publications would devote themselves with the greatest possible concentration to the wide distribution of American products, high in quality, and as reasonable in price as good quality allows, the public would be protected, advertisers and newspapers would prosper, general prosperity, honesty and happiness would greatly increase.

KENNETT HARRIS

Paulette, Who Wouldn't Spoon, and Willie, Who Wanted to, Showing Woman's Inconsistency

By Kennett Harris

Copyright, 1907, by American-Journal-Examiner

THE two young men in the packing room had finished eating their lunches, and the slimmer one, who wore a black cameo shirt decorated with a crocheted red necktie and a blue enamel and rhinestone pin, wiped the evidences of pie from his mouth and hands with a convenient wisp of excelsior, and, leaning back on the table, pillowed his head on a roll of brown paper.

"There's some girls who can't never tell what they do want," he observed, after a moment's reverie. "There's Paulette. I told you about her, didn't I? She's the one I met up at the hall last Saturday night a week ago. A peach! When I first seen her I thought to myself, 'This must be my corner. You're all right, girlie; I guess I can make you do.' And when I flagged her she come right back at me with the glad smile, and there wasn't nothing to it. That was all right.

"Then I made a date with her and we take in a show. I've got it put up that I'm all the bonbons with her, and I'm not feeling sore about it, neither. So when we get back and find there ain't nobody left on the front steps I think I'm due to get my fingers scratched, and maybe break what cigars there is left in my vest pocket. Am I? Not on your life!

"That's Easy"

"'Oh, I want to cut all that out, Willie,' she says; 'if you want to put your arm around anything go sit on the curb and hug the hydrant.'

"'That's easy,' I says. 'You tell me where there's a hydrant that's got cunning little black curls all over its head and pug kind of eyes, and they'll have to pry me loose from it with a pinch bar before they can get the hose screwed on.'

"'Cut that out, too,' she says. 'Why can't you sit still and talk and act sensible? What's the matter with you boys, anyway? I think you're all daffy. The minute you get a chance to be alone with a girl you think you've got to act up. Honestly, it makes me weary.'

"'I should think it would,' I says. 'You don't mind if I move up a little closer, do you?' I says. 'I hate to be taking up so much of the room. Some of the tenants might come along and make a row about it.'

"'There ain't no strings to you,' she says. 'You don't have to take up any room around here at all unless you want to. If you are going to, you can slide back to where you was and stay there. Say! Wasn't that music grand? I think it was the best ever. And that fellow who played the cornet, wasn't he cute?

"'Cute as a little red wagon,' I says, moving back to the other side of the steps. 'I'm going to Baltimore to-morrow morning,' I says. 'You didn't know that, did you?'

"'What are you going to Baltimore for?' she says. 'You're lying, ain't you?'

"'I don't want to go particular,' I says, 'but I want to please you, and if I go there I can talk to you over long distance telephone. I guess that would suit you,' I says.

"'You can sit half way over if you want to,' says she.

"'I've got this place warm, now,' I says. 'What's the use?'

"'Don't get a grouch on,' she says. 'I've just had a lovely time, and you're all right in Boston, but that isn't saying that I want anything to lean against. What are you turning your head around for?'

"'I'm trying to see if somebody hasn't come up behind me when I wasn't noticing and tacked a scarlet fever sign on my back,' I says. 'You look well at a distance,' I says.

"'So do you, Willie,' she says.

"'But you look a whole lot better when a fellow gets up close to you,' I says, and I moved up an inch or two. She didn't say nothing, so I cleaned off another piece of the concrete. No trouble, so I hoisted myself along a little more. I was coming along fine on the homestretch when I got the word to stop. I stopped.

"'Now, that's just right,' she says. 'You stay right there and we won't have any more. Was you acquainted with Ed Grigsby? Pearl told me that you was. I used to be acquainted with him myself. He's gone to work in Worcester now, and he thinks that there ain't no place like Worcester. Was you ever there?

"'She went on a-talking that way, and I sat still and listened to it for half an hour. Once in a while I'd make a break to be sociable, but I'd get called down. The gas was burning just high enough so I could see them pearly teeth, and her cheeks and red lips and the curls under her feather hat, and she was in her glad rags with the fluffiness on top, and I could smell the perfume on her every time she moved or turned her head. Maravna!

"'But nothing doing. And after a while she got up to go. 'Good night,' she says, offering me her lily hand. I pulled, but she jerked loose and skipped up the stairs. I'm standing there like I'd been plunked down into a post hole and the dirt stamped hard up to my knees. I felt I needed a fur overcoat right there.

"'And two days after that I met Pearl, and she says, 'Paulette says she was out with you the other night. She says she had a swell time, but you was awful bashful. You want to smoke up, Willie, when you're out with Paulette.'

On the Trail of the Polite

By Wex Jones

[Miss Dylie Pyckle, commissioned to investigate the manners and hospitality of the Bostonian, dressed in her shabbiest clothes and sallied forth.]

SUBWAY employes are real impolite. At 6 o'clock one evening I went into the station at Dover street and asked the ticket seller if it would be quicker for me to go into the Subway or take a surface car to get to Cambridge. He curtly replied that he couldn't tell, and a very rude man in the long line behind me called out, "Aw, get a map!" I described the house to him and told him any one would know it by the apple tree before the door. It doesn't grow any apples on it any more, but, of course, it's still an apple tree. The ticket seller said he didn't live in Cambridge—he lived in Charlestown, which seems funny—you'd think he'd live near the line he worked for. I bought a ticket and when I forgot to drop it in the box the ticket chopper very rudely ran after me and demanded it. Then the guard asked me not to stand in the door when I asked him if the Atlantic avenue line was shorter, as I was in such a hurry. Rudeness is the predominating note on the Elevated.

* * *

I went to a church in the Back Bay last Sunday. I was given a seat, but not one person asked me to dinner!

* * *

Meeting a policeman on the street, I told him I was afraid Mrs. Niggle's cat would get into my room some day and eat my canary, and asked him to please arrest the cat at once. He said no crime had been committed, and I told him the police were there to prevent crime. Then the traffic got all blocked and the policeman deliberately turned away from me and began shouting at a truck driver. I pulled his arm and he said crossly that he couldn't bother with an old cat. I wonder—

To test the politeness of the men on the ferries, I crossed on one of the city scows. Half-way over I uttered a piercing scream and cried that a child had fallen overboard. The ferry was stopped and the men asked me where it was. A tug bumped into us, we stopped so quick, and every one got in a panic and there was an awful rumpus. I told the men I wasn't sure whether it was a child or a newspaper that had blown over, and the rudeness of those ruffians! A deckhand laughed a coarse, sarcastic laugh and the captain swore dreadfully! No politeness there.

I found one polite man in Boston. I was trying to find a place at dusk yesterday evening, and I happened to ask a pleasant young man the way. I told him I was from New York and didn't know the city. He came from New York, too, he said, and he happened to be going to the very next house to the one I wanted, so he would be delighted to show me the way. He really was a very nice young man and I was almost sorry when we parted and he went off very hurriedly.

P. S.—Most annoying! I lost my watch, quite a valuable one, somewhere last night. I suppose it's useless to advertise in a city where I've only met one really polite man.
